NONE GRUDGE 4D FOR THIS LACE

Paton's "33" Lace is a product with nothing about it you can criticise—the tags are patent and absolutely fast, the colours and initial smartness are permanent, and in use it will easily last the lifetime of the best shoes you have.

If you wish to satisfy yourself on these points take a Paton's "33" Lace and compare it with any other you have. First, compare the colours, next examine the tags and note how ours are affixed—then weigh the two laces and see which has the more material in it—Paton's "33" Laces as often as not are fully twice the weight of others—hence the wearing quality.

4d. is quite enough to pay for first class boot or shoe laces but make certain you get Paton "33" Laces.

Avoid disappointment—buy

PATON'S 33 LACES

If your bootmaker cannot supply, write to makers enclosing 1/- for 3 pairs. State whether for Ladies' or Gent's boots or shoes. Also colour—black, tan or white—and for shoe laces state whether tubular or flat required.

Priced 4d. per pair.

History

Not only the scholar is attracted by Egypt's wonderful past. Its monuments are so impressive, the scenery so strangely beautiful its native life so simple and almost unchanged through the centuries, that the ordinary winter visitor finds more varied pleasure in a stay in Egypt than the scholar whose main interest is in the past alone. That is the charm of

EGYPT

She gives with an unsparing hand to all who visit there. Beauty and wonder, health in her magically restorative air, comfort in her hotels and luxurious dahabeahs and tourist steamers.

The Whole Town's Talking

History repeats itself.

LAST year "the whole town was talking" of the 2-Litre 14/60 h.p. Lagonda — making its debut at Olympia 1925. Overwhelming success has followed the introduction of this superb model.

Olympia this year will hold another Lagonda* triumph—a new masterpiece that is the climax of over a quarter of a century's manufacturing experience.

See this new Lagonda first. It is the last word in mechanical perfection, the acme of car refinement, a revelation in efficiency, setting new and better standards of performance.

Never before has there been attained such a combination of power, silence, and smoothness in one car.

It will be exhibited on

STAND · 134

Avenues P.Q. — Olympia — October 22 - 30

in company with a fine range of the famous Fourteen – Sixty H.P. Lagonda Models.

There's Safety in Wool!

Pure Wool is without equal as a covering for the human frame. This has been recognised from very early times.

Pure Wool garments, worn next the skin, form virtual insurance policies against ill-health.

By Wool (Nature's own provision) is bodily warmth maintained, clamminess and chill prevented and access afforded to air and to light's invaluable health-giving rays.

"Pesco" Underwear, being Wool in its daintiest, purest and most attractive form, is the choice of those whose paramount concern is for their health as much as of those who place excellence of design, fine workmanship and alluring textures before considerations of hygiene. It is an underwear which enjoys the approval of both taste and common sense.

Overcoat Style for the Active Man

IT was difficult to believe when the September sun was establishing heat records that you would ever need an overcoat again. But already it is time to consider that overcoat.

Here is to-day's authentic style, tailored from Royal Ulster Mosse—an all-wool material woven on our own looms in Northern Ireland. This coat combines sufficient warmth for the coldest days with a lightness appreciated by the active man, for it loses nothing of smartness or cut in being of extreme utility.

Can they face a British Winter?

According to the weather prophets, the present dull Autumn will be followed by a typically British winter. It is fairly certain that we shall not lack variety! The most pressing matter is to be sure that children shall not be exposed to danger through these changes.

CHILPRUFE for CHILDREN

Chilprufe clothes the body in warm air, so that no matter what they do or where they go, there is no possibility of chill or discomfort. Its beautiful Pure Wool fabric, finely, evenly knitted, is finished by a secret process which keeps it silky to the skin and extends the life of the garment.

The all-round better service from Chilprufe is so widely conceded that we advise you to see our stock for yourself. The cut and finish are charming and faultless. By coming now you may rely upon finding any garment you may need—night wear as well as day wear, for babies, girls and boys—in all the many sizes made.

Whispers are distinct and hands free.

A Constant War

A CONSTANT war is waged between man and the elements, from the light skirmish when some jolly fellow sails a small boat round the Foreland on a Saturday afternoon to the big engagement when Vesuvius decides to break into eruption. It is an interesting, if one-sided, conflict, and we hold our own under considerable difficulties.

In Kindly Mood

THIS war with the elements has occupied the world stage with a vengeance during the past few weeks. There have been some terrifying encounters and although Man has scored valuable points, he has not come out of them unscathed. The past summer has been notable for the number of times that the Channel has been swum, but on top of these successes came the ghastly reminder from Florida that we exist on sufferance, and can only compete with Nature when she is in kindly mood.

A Triumphant Trek

NO sooner has Sir Alan Cobham completed his triumphant trek to Australia and back, than a French air-liner crashes in a Kentish meadow turning the smiling countryside into a holocaust. I do not recall these tragedies in ghoulish mood. We should accept them in a spirit of humility, and realise that in spite of our rather spectacular successes we may not be such supermen after all.

A Mimic War

BUT this BYSTANDER must not take the world and its troubles too seriously. Let us turn to the mimic war that is being waged between Bloomsbury and Covent Garden. The objective of this struggle is the site of the Foundling Hospital, and the funny part of it is that while Covent Garden does not wish to carry the position, Bloomsbury is girding her loins against the problematical onslaughts of a not too enthusiastic foe.

A Splendid Thing

THE financiers who control the destinies of Covent Garden and of the Foundling Hospital site think it would be a splendid thing to transfer the great fruit market to more convenient Bloomsbury. The idea seems a good one. But, apparently, Covent Garden doesn't want to be transferred, and Bloomsbury doesn't want the fruit market. There has even been formed a Foundling Estate Protection Association, of which Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson is President. And so we have a gallant force defending a position which, as I say, the enemy rank and file seem in no mind to occupy.

A Comic Quarrel

I DO not propose to enter into the rights and wrongs of this comic quarrel. It is quite certain that Covent Garden is hopelessly congested, and I can't see how it can be extended unless we produce our operas at some convenient picture palace and send the National Sporting Club to Brixton. But this is only one side of the question. The lodgers of Bloomsbury who occupy all those third-floor-backs in which Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson has a sort of vested interest, may object to the smell of onions. And why should the fears of Bloomsbury be made to flow unnecessarily. Why should they weep—and echo answers "Why?"

Cultured and Courteous

A HEFTY attack on the B.B.C. has been launched by a gentleman who was not unconnected, at one time, with that wide-flung organisation. He describes it as a machine without a Soul, but whether he looks upon himself as the missing organ, I couldn't say. He very rightly pays a tribute to the administrative and engineering side,

By Blam

EDGED TOOLS

British Manufacturer: "Why ever did "Gillette" them do it, Stanley?"

but refers to the young gentlemen who control the programmes as "cultured and courteous amateurs"—than which a more devastating criticism could not be made.

Worth a Guinea

These "amateurs," he claims, are out of sympathy with the "delicately-poised outlook of the artist." Dear me! I had supposed that the quarrel was much more material in character, for I, myself, have been paid as much for a sketch as famous pills are said to be worth a box.

For Social Purposes

The old type of razor was never considered as a standard weapon of defence in the Army, but according to tradition and the American comic press, it has for generations been very popular among negroes in settling family disputes. One of my friends is fond of relating the story of a big coloured gentleman with a fierce look in his eye who entered a village store somewhere down in Carolina and said he wanted to buy a good razor. "Sure," said the store-keeper, "I've just got a fresh consignment of the very latest thing in safety razors, the best value on the market."

"Say, dat don' intrest me a-tall," replied the negro, "I want dis yer razor for social purposes!"

Tangled Skeins!

Dear me! Dear me! Dear all of us! Mr. Bernard Shaw, or so my morning paper asserts, has not used soap on his face for fifty years. But surely it is a matter for speculation whether Mr. Shaw has a face or no! Frequently, in the Adelphi, I have met a lounge suit, bagging slightly at the knees, surmounted by a paling ginger beard, but of face—beyond those apple cheeks—no sign! As the poet sang:—

> What tangled skeins we gaze upon!
> Take Mr. Shaw and Mr. John:
> Each has a face, and yet somehow
> We haven't seen it up till now.

Conservative Creatures

It is rumoured that a new coat for men's evening wear will shortly be placed upon the market. It may be, but unless the changes are very slight it won't be seen at Ciro's or the Midnight Follies. Men are conservative creatures in the matter of dress, and, now I come to think of it, that has been said before.

The Sort of Coat

The man who embarks on a new scheme of personal attire is either a dude or a very brave man. Either he is prompted by considerations with which the chorus gent. is chiefly concerned, or he is prepared to back his opinion that a more comfortable garb has appeared on the sartorial horizon. I know a certain artist who wears the sort of coat that never was seen on sea or land, and I marvel in his pluck.

Those Inventors!

Inventions are crowding upon us with such speed and regularity that very soon we shall be seriously put out unless the morning paper announces the day's invention along with the weather forecast. I am moved to speak in this wise since hearing the new "Panatrope," which, it is claimed, is to revolutionise the reproduction of sound in regard to the gramophone and wireless. Be that as it may, the "Panatrope" certainly achieves that which it sets out to do with complete success.

A Novel Advertisement

Travellers by the escalator at the Bond Street Station of the Central London Railway will have been duly impressed by the very interesting example of modern mural decoration carried out by Messrs. A. and F. Pears, who are to be congratulated on a delightfully original improvement of an important public amenity. Is it too much to hope that this new idea will be further developed until the actual tunnel between stations is brought into line?

A Further Suggestion

Here is a suggestion for some enterprising national advertiser: Let a series of progressive pictures, such as one finds on a reel of cinematograph film, be painted throughout the entire length of the tunnel. The movement of the train would convert the railway into an up-to-date picture palace, for all we should have to do would be to sit and watch the panorama unfolding before our eyes. I make no charge for the suggestion.

WHO, WHEN & WHERE

BY THE BYSTANDER IN SOCIETY

The Return of the Court

THE King and Queen's autumn holiday at Balmoral is over, and the Court returned to Buckingham Palace last Friday. Their Majesties are expected to pay a visit to Sandringham, where all the alterations have now been practically completed, before the great State banquet they are giving early in November to the Overseas and Dominions Premiers, most of whom have already arrived for the Imperial Conference. Rumour has it that vital questions touching upon the relations between the Mother Country, the Dominions, and the Dependencies will be settled at the Conference.

Disloyalty and Bad Taste

IT is a long time since I have heard such general protest and indignation which is being voiced everywhere touching Mr. H. G. Wells's reference to the King in the second volume of his book, The World of William Clissold.

An author cannot be held responsible for the opinions of his characters, any more than he can be held responsible for their actions. Opinions and actions are part of his craft in character creation: they are part of his story. For this reason when a character in a novel indulges in a long diatribe against monarchy as exemplified by the diverting and holding up of traffic for royal processions, you take it as the author's presentation of a particular type. But when this same character speaks of the King as being "worthy, conscientious, entirely unmeaning and uninteresting," characterisation no longer exists. The author himself is speaking because he has put a personal opinion into the mouth of an imaginary person.

It is so easy for brilliant writers like Mr. Wells to sit in the seat of judgment, but how can Mr. Wells know anything about the King? All sorts of doors are set wide open to talent such as his, but, so far, I've not heard of any door being opened to Mr. Wells that would have given him the opportunity of meeting the King. If I am right, therefore, he has penned this sentence in ignorance. On occasions Mr. Wells has poured fire from his pen on newspapers which he considered had misrepresented him. Yet he himself, it would appear, has not hesitated to misrepresent the Sovereign—a state of affairs which could be dismissed as childish if it were not so harmful. That is why your Bystander and many, many others raise their voices in protest.

The Flight of a Princess

I HAVE seen it stated that when the Duke and Duchess of York go into residence at 145, Piccadilly, on their return from Australia in the Spring, they will be the first Royal folk to live in a house with a number and not a name. But this is a mistake.

A former Duke of York, the second son of George III, after a series of financial difficulties which culminated in the horses he and his equerry and his groom were riding being seized for debt by sheriffs' officers as they alighted at the Royal Enclosure at Ascot, had a house in Connaught Square. That house had only a number.

Then about the same time the wife of George IV—then Prince Regent—lived in Connaught Place, likewise with only a number to her front door. It was to this house that Princess Charlotte, the only child of that ill marriage, fled in 1814 from Warwick House, close to St. James's Park, when her father told her that all her attendants were to be turned away and replaced by strangers. This was because she had refused to marry the heir to the Dutch throne.

Princess Charlotte was a woman of spirit. Directly her infuriated father, supported by the Bishop of Salisbury, told her of the change he was making in her household she "clapped a bonnet on her head, ran into the street, hailed a hackney coach at Charing Cross, and drove off to her mother's house in Connaught Place."

Society was aghast. Never before had a Princess of Great Britain and Ireland driven in a hackney coach! The heads of the Government, members of the Royal Family, Cabinet Ministers, Bishops, all went, one after the other—a procession of envoys—to the house in Connaught Place, trying to induce the Princess to return to Warwick House. Finally, at two o'clock in the morning, after hours of "persuasions, entreaties, and refusals," the Princess, "kicking and bouncing," gave way, and was escorted back to Warwick House by her uncle, the Duke of York, the Lord Chancellor, and the Lord Chief Justice. What a history! In these days it is difficult to believe it possible.

"Came with the Conqueror"

WHEN the Prime Minister and Mrs. Baldwin stayed with Viscount and Viscountess Downe last week at Wykeham Abbey for the Conservative Conference at Scarborough they were the guests of one of the few families who can truthfully say that they "came over with the Conqueror"

Lord Downe descends directly from a Norman knight, and under the Anglicised name of Dawnay his family has been settled at Wykeham since the time of Edward III. They were given the Irish viscounty of Downe by Charles II. An English barony conferred by George III expired with the fifth Viscount, but was conferred again on the late Lord Downe, and is now held by the present peer, who sits in the House of Lords as Baron Dawnay.

Lord Downe's father died two years ago, leaving nearly a quarter of a million. He lived at Dingley Hall, near Market Harborough. Lord Downe, however, preferred the ancestral home at Wykeham Abbey, and sold the place in Leicestershire.

second Lord Inverclyde died, leaving everything to his widow. But a few weeks later, whilst Lady Inverclyde was going through some of her husband's papers which he had left in a handbag in his room at the office of G. and J. Burns, the big shipowning firm in Glasgow, of which he was a member, she found a later will written on three separate sheets of paper, only one of which was signed. Lady Inverclyde at once handed the second will to the solicitors. Some doubt arose as to the validity of this will, which made very different arrangements from the first, but finally a friendly arrangement was made by which Lady Inverclyde was to receive the income from a sum of £200,000 which the second will directed was to be paid to the Merchants' House of Glasgow for the benefit of distressed seamen in certain localities in Scotland, England, Ireland and America, preference to be given to those who had been in the service of the Cunard Company or of G. and J. Burns, Limited.

Lady Inverclyde married General Sir Archibald Hunter, and her death now places the income from the £200,000 at the disposal of the Mercants' House for what will be called the Inverclyde Bequest for Seamen.

The second Lord Inverclyde, whose grandfather was the originator of the Cunard Line, was an uncle of the present peer.

A Veteran

LAST week that veteran hunter, Lord North, celebrated his ninetieth birthday. Until twenty-four years ago Lord North, I believe, had never missed a hunting season since he was a boy, and for years was a familiar figure with the Warwickshire. Then he met with an accident which prevented him from riding. But Lord North did not give up his hunting. He started a pack of Basset hounds at Wroxton Abbey, his place near Banbury, which have now become one of the attractions in the district.

Basset hounds are not usual in England. They are used chiefly for hunting hares, and give excellent sport for those who cannot ride or cannot afford the costly pleasure of fox-hunting. Both Lord North and his eldest daughter, the Hon. Mrs. FitzGerald, are good judges of hounds.

Early this year, when the King was thinning out the large number of dogs Queen Alexandra kept at Sandringham, his Majesty presented Lord North with a couple of Basset hounds for the Wroxton Abbey pack.

"Say, you needn't have bothered to change your wine! I was playing in the cellar yesterday. They've got a big barrel down there, and rows of bottles with different labels. They were filling them all from the barrel. I saw them do it!"

The hotel people were so angry that the boy and his mother were asked to leave.

Concerning Various Millions

THE fortunes made in tobacco and in the manufacture of cotton thread are positively startling.

To begin with tobacco. Seven members of the Wills tobacco family of Bristol have died in the last seventeen years, each, with one exception, a millionaire. And the one exception, Sir Edward Wills, was only £50,000 or so below the million. The rest had nothing less than two millions and a good deal over. There was one fortune of five millions and another of three millions.

The latest Wills fortune, of close upon two millions, has been left by Mrs. Hamilton-Fellows, the daughter of the late Sir Frederick Wills, and the mother of the Countess of Kinnoull, who is the residuary legatee.

Lady Kinnoull was married only three years ago to Lord Kinnoull. She was then nineteen, and he was twenty-one. This summer he went bankrupt, and in his public examination said that for eighteen months before his failure he had been a director in a motor engineering firm, and was no longer living with his wife.

The total sum represented by these six wills is close upon eighteen and a half millions of money.

The Coats family, who own the cotton thread manufactory of Ferguslie at Paisley, have even a larger number of millionaires. Seven of them have left fortunes of over a million, and to these you must add Lord

Glentanar—a millionaire four times over—Sir Stuart Coats, Sir Thomas Glen-Coats, Mr. William Coats, the Chairman of the Coats Company, and the late Mr. W. A. Coats, who died recently. That makes eleven millionaires in one family. The Coats go one better than the Wills in that the total family wealth is estimated at something like twenty-five millions.

Can America, where millionaires grow like French beans or tomatoes, or even mushrooms, show anything to equal seventeen millionaires in two families?

Caricature and its Limitations

Speaking frankly, Mr. Albert Buhrer got a good deal of free advertisement for "The Rude Book," because Mr. Osbert Sitwell and Mr. C. W. R. Nevinson solemnly assured a newspaper that the book was the outcome of their pen and pencil. Their claim was one of those foolish things which normal and ordinary folk don't understand, and although it was explained as a "joke," the humour has yet to be found. However, Mr. Buhrer is now exhibiting his caricatures for the book at the Chenil Galleries. They are clever, decidedly clever, but to your Bystander's mind they have a certain malice which is outside the scope of caricature.

Mr. Buhrer, the "Tell" of "The Rude Book," has a mastery of line, and obviously he has made a close study of Gillray and his contemporaries. But there is a bitterness in his pencil which checks the smile or laugh that a caricature should bring as naturally as a good joke.

Sturry Court

When the late Viscount Milner bought Sturry Court, near Canterbury, some twenty years or so ago, the house had fallen from its former high estate as a summer residence of the Abbots of St. Augustine's Monastery, and, later, the home of the Lords Strangford. It had become a farmhouse.

Lord Milner restored the house to its old beautiful condition, and made gardens round about it that were a joy and a delight to anybody who cares about gardens. Indeed, they were so exceptionally beautiful that after Lord Milner's death it seemed the most natural thing for Lady Milner to offer Sturry and its gardens to the Royal Horticultural Society. Unfortunately the Society could find no use for the house or garden, and was therefore obliged to refuse the generous offer.

Lady Milner has now offered Sturry to the King's School at Canterbury, a gift which has been gratefully accepted. In future the boys on the Junior side of the school will be housed at Sturry instead of in the Precincts at Canterbury Cathedral.

Lord Milner, one of the greatest of our proconsuls, lived at Sturry Court for nineteen years, and as the Dean of Canterbury says in making public acknowledgment of Lady Milner's gift, "To-day Sturry Court speaks of a great servant of England and of the Dominions for and in which he worked." And the Dean hopes that "in the part it has now to play as a portion of an English public school it may strengthen the bonds between ourselves and the Dominions, train new servants of the nation and Empire, and inspire them with equally lofty ideals of the public good."

Lady Milner, whose generosity will give a splendid atmosphere to the early days of boys at the King's School, is a daughter of the late Admiral Maxse, and a sister of Mr. Leo Maxse, the editor of the National Review. Her first husband was the Marquess of Salisbury's uncle, Lord Edward Cecil. She lost her only son in the War, and her only daughter is married to the Hon. Alexander Hardinge, the King's Assistant Private Secretary, and the heir to Lord Hardinge of Penshurst.

A Derby Winner

Hitherto Lord Glanely has not had a house in London, but he has now bought the house in Hill Street, Mayfair, which used to belong to Sir Stuart Samuel. It is not a large house, but is especially adapted for entertaining. The decorations are especially fine, there being a quantity of panelling, and I should imagine they will require no alteration.

Lord Glanely was Sir William Tatem when he received his peerage eight years ago. He is a great shipping magnate as well as an owner of racehorses, winning the Derby in 1919. Although his shipping and manifold other interests are in Cardiff and South Wales, Lord Glanely has no residence in the Principality.

RUGGER REACTIONS

HEAT BUMPS

By "PENDARVES"

THERE is something very odd and unsuitable about sitting through a Rugger match on a blazing hot summer afternoon, puckering up one's eyes and undoing one's waistcoat, and all that sort of thing. But so it was on the afternoon when, at any rate, the London Rugger season opened properly, and the Scottish came, saw, and were conquered by the Harlequins—without much credit to either side, by the way.

You cannot expect men who have not yet shaken off the sloth of summer to disport themselves frightfully creditably on the footer field during a species of heat wave, so we will leave that part of it at that.

But can anyone tell me just what manner of man it is who stands on the concrete slopes at Twickenham—or any other Rugger ground for that matter—and continues at brief intervals to say "Now come on, 'Quins," more to himself than to the sweating men fifty or sixty yards away from him? And where does he want them to come to, when they are already leading by 17 points?

Has he a blood relation playing? Not likely. Has he ever punted or passed a Rugger ball? Most unlikely—except when one came over from a field on to some roadway he was treading. Would he bear the heat and burden of a scrum or a loose maul if he could? Not he. But still, I suppose, every club likes to have their supporters on the touch line. Except, of course, the Scotch clubs away up in the North there, who tell me they are not concerned in any way with the public, whom they abhor—h'm!

However, we stood our heat bumps with astonishing fortitude on that day. We had a man next to us in the stand who preached the gospel of the game to us with all the vigour and invective of a John Knox. He said, inter alia and with a funereal solemnity, that "to win matches you must have an attack—it is not a bit o' good talking" (We could have told him that!) Now is not that an extraordinarily interesting remark? So original, I mean. Opens up a new line of thought entirely, doesn't it? A sombre man behind me, who worked England's scrum years ago, leaned forward at this point and asked the Oracle where he was at school? He told us he had been "educated privately." To which, much to my astonishment and regret, the old International said, "Well, I hope you'll be buried publicly, and soon." Chastened, we turned our eyes once more to the—er—may I say, game?

Awfully interesting and enjoyable at the beginning of a season to watch the old stars (having been rubbed up to a glitter once again) twinkling on what I saw described on Sunday morning as "the vivid green verdure of the perfect turf" I got a gulp in the throat on reading that—or was it the early morning tea? Are "Wakers" and Dicky Wicks and Gibbs and Davies (V. G., not W. J. A.—he has gone, unfortunately) ever going to give up the game? I see no signs of it.

"Wakers" got the ball once (only once!) out of a loose how-do-you-do, and was off, with all that old dash and deadliness. He reminds me more than ever this season of a battle cruiser cleared for action. He won't like this: but I hope he will forgive. And one can't even in these early days visualise any other personality taking England's XV on to the field again four times this season—I always connect him in my mind, and always shall, with one typical picture that flicked across my vision. Swansea. Wales and England scrapping in the mud. Fists and deep feeling. A Welsh forward emerging from a maul, miles away from the ball. A left hook at "Wakers's" jaw. Received mutely, almost unconsciously, it seemed to me "Wakers" merely looked at him, picked up his scrum cap, and carried on as usual. It was the look that I remember, and always shall.

The stars get thicker in the girth, that is all. Hamilton Wickes is bigger, and a shade slower. So is Johnny Chick (it is all this heavy aviation in light machines during the summer months). But he is not slower—on the contrary. Men rag him about not shoving in the scrum—but a winger has not much time to shove at the back of scrums. He is out and away almost as soon as he is in. Bitterly disappointed I shall be if this very brainy player does not get capped for England (he does not want to play for Wales) this year; his last before R.A.F. service overseas takes him from our Rugger grounds.

However, we shall see. And meanwhile, I am going to the Glasgow Derby, and that will be fun.

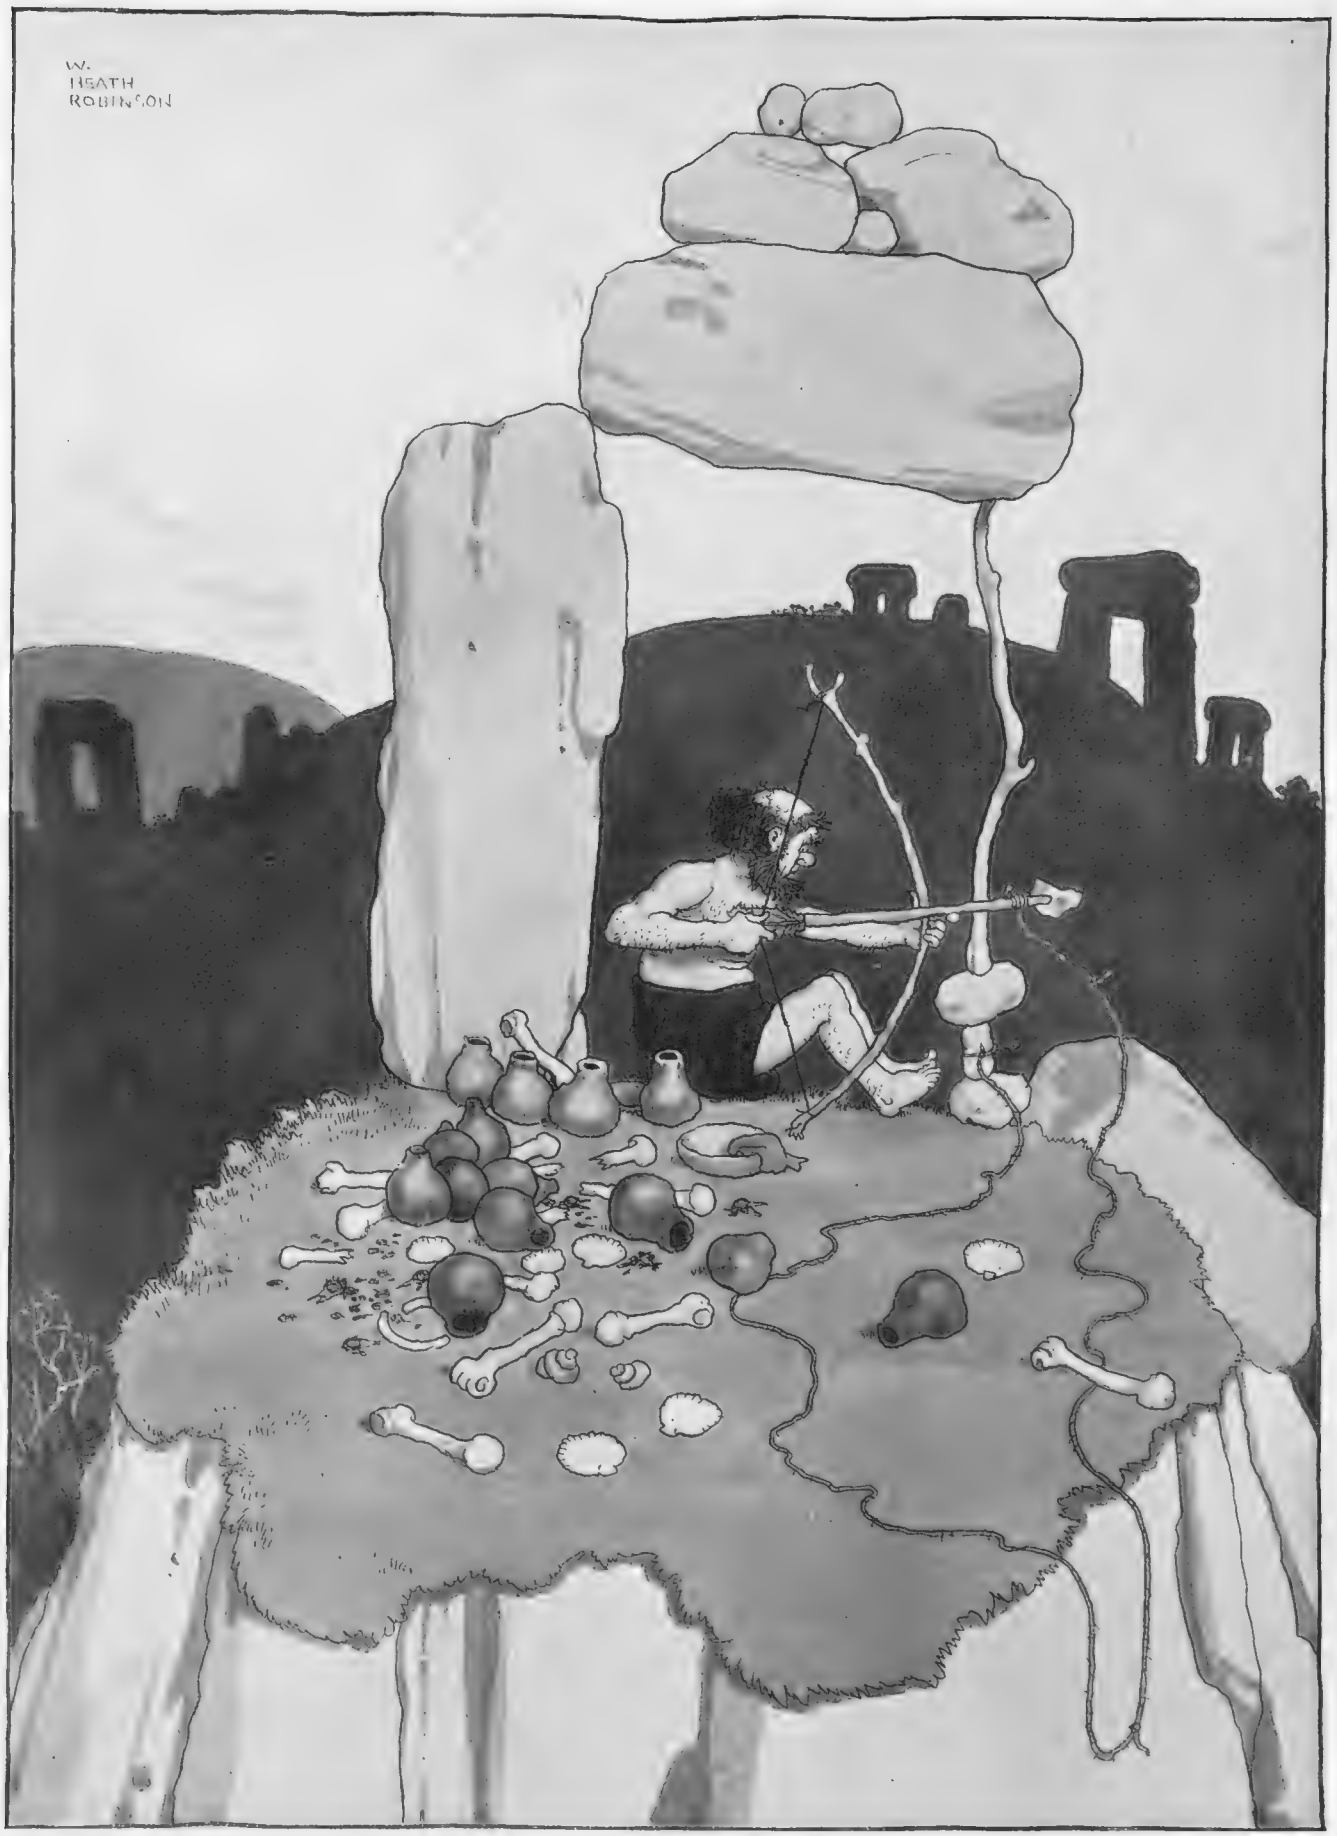
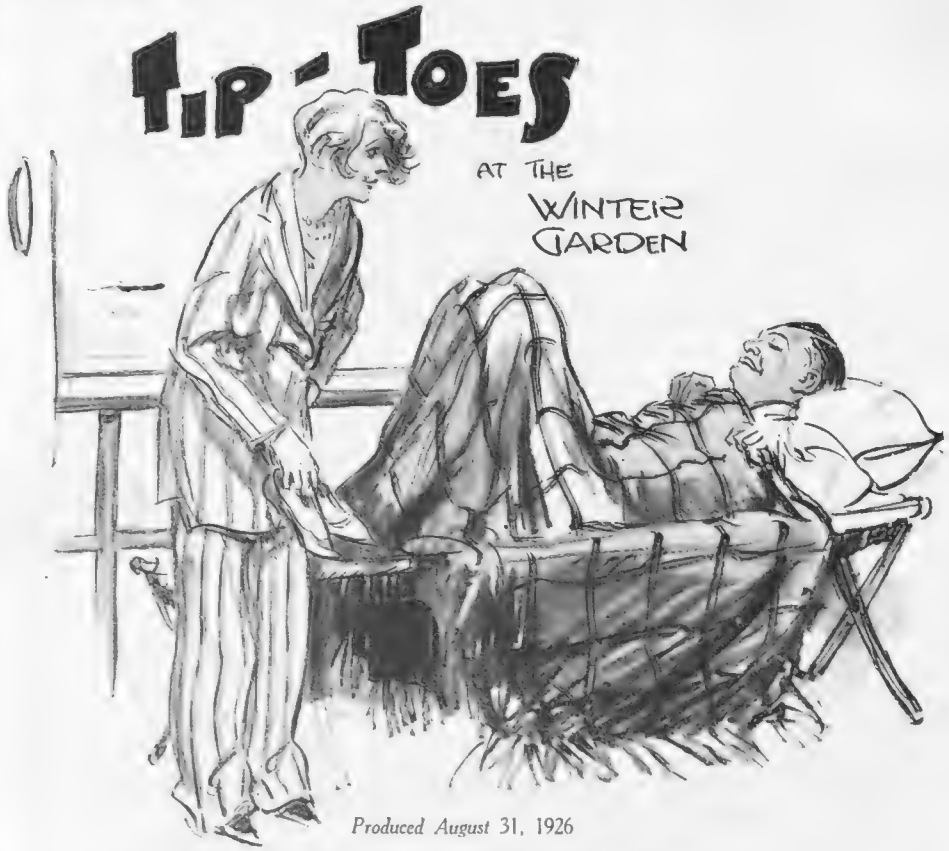
A Striking Cure



BY W. HEATH ROBINSON

A desperate but effective remedy for a sick headache sometimes resorted to on the "morning after" in the pre-aspirin period of the Stone Age



Produced August 31, 1926

By "JINGLE" Illustrations by MACMICHAEL

THIS is a very lively entertainment, with a charming heroine, two or three comedians, and several kinds of American music. Add to the mixture, as the cookery recipes say, a number of really jolly chorus ladies, and you have all that is necessary for a most exhilarating evening. Even the hero of the story, who is usually represented by a throaty gentleman of distinguished appearance, is replaced here by a quite ordinary young man who is entirely human and who sings with nice restraint. He is Mr. Allen Kearns, and I understand that he is from the United States of America, which, as everyone knows by this time, is a strip of land south of Canada that was specially created to be a pattern and example to the rest of the world.

TIP-TOES (Miss Dorothy Dickson) is a member of the "Kayes," a wandering troupe of mountebanks who have been engaged to perform at a private entertainment at Palm Beach, Florida, the seaside resort of millionaires, real and reputed. On their arrival, however, the gentleman who is giving the entertainment recognises Tip-Toes as a sweet young thing whom he met previously at another seaside place, and with whom he allowed himself to be photographed as an admirer whose intentions were not necessarily honourable. So, as he is already a very much-married man, he gives the company a thousand dollars to go away and play in the next street. The two men of the troupe take the money, but cannot tear themselves away from the place. Instead, they arrange a cunning plot. They will spend their newly-gotten dollars in launching Tip-Toes into the Society of the place. Very likely one of the many millionaires around will marry her, and then her friends can come and live with her, and be happy ever after.

SO we next see Tip-Toes nicely arrayed in a dainty costume ready to mark down her prey; and this brings us to the song of the evening. Miss Dickson has not a very robust voice, but it is quietly tuneful and playfully humorous, and I prefer that kind of singing to the noisier samples. She announces that she is Looking for a Boy who is Looking for a Girl to Love, and as she sings she runs up and down peering anxiously into the audience from her place on the stage. I sat upright in my seat and tried to catch her wistful eye, but I regret to say without any working result. The song has not only to be sung, but acted as well, and Miss Dickson handles it with great charm and complete success.

IN due course Steve Burton drifts on to the scene. He is Mr. Allen Kearns, and he brings with him what seems to be a portable wireless outfit. I thought at first this was to be an accessory to an outbreak of humour, but nothing happened in connection with it, so that for practical purposes Mr. Kearns seems merely to be taking on part of the scene-shifter's job. Steve is very awkwardly dressed in clothes that look as if they had been bought ready-made; but he presently owns to the possession of seven millions of dollars, and when you have got that much you can wear the same collar for a whole week and not be afraid that the girls will snub you. Steve is young and green; but that kind is usually the worst when it breaks away from home and ma.

STEVE has not been on the stage long before he is surrounded by a bevy of hopeful girls, each of whom is doubtless confident that she would know how to spend seven millions without previous experience. Steve proposes a game that seems to be the equivalent of our "Blind Man's Buff." The girls shall blindfold him, and he will run after them and kiss as many as he can catch, which is not a bad programme for a raw beginner. In some way or another Tip-Toes gets worked into the picture, and whether she catches him or he catches her does not really matter. What matters is that she is duly caught and kissed, and that seems as good a way as any of getting introduced to a nice girl. Carrying out the understanding with her partners, she affects to be a wealthy young lady with several motors and yachts and other appurtenances of the extremely rich. Then she suddenly realises that she is genuinely in love with Steve, and therefore cannot proceed with the course mapped out for her by her partners, because that would be deceit, which, as we all know, is foreign to the feminine nature.

S

STEVE, of course, feels very keenly her confession that she is only a play-actress, and, as is usual in comedies of this sort, the course of true love exhibits the varying changes of temperature necessary to avoid rushing the romance to a premature conclusion. Steve invites everybody to come aboard his yacht; and it is there that he learns of the trap that was laid for him as a millionaire likely to rise to the bait of a poor but fascinating girl. Of course, all is over and that sort of thing; but, guided no doubt by the lofty instincts of true love, Tip-Toes contrives that she and Steve shall be left alone on the yacht without the means of getting ashore for the night.

S

THIS gives the opportunity for a very delicate scene with a song about "Nighty-night," quite amusingly presented by Miss Dickson and Mr. Kearns. It is finally settled that Steve shall camp out on deck, while Tip-Toes shall have the cabin to herself, and the curtain falls on that at the end of the second act. But no explanation appears to be offered as to how Tip-Toes came to acquire the lovely white-and-silver gown in which she appears in the last act, with tiara to match. Still, it is not for me to give the uncharitable a handle for their false conclusions, and I have no doubt that Tip-Toes came by her costly apparel in a perfectly regular manner. Besides, Steve comes along soon after, and says he is going to marry the girl, and nothing could be fairer than that.

S

MR. LADDIE CLIFF as a member of the "Kaye" troupe is agreeably humorous throughout, whether as a cross-talk comedian or a speciality dancer. He is ably seconded in his efforts by Mr. John Kirby, who is, in more ways than one, a humorist of substance. Miss Dickson has a dancing scene all to herself in the last act—one of those elaborate turns in which the lady, upheld by a stalwart partner, makes a resolute effort to chip pieces out of the ceiling with her dainty toe. But it is all very graceful and very satisfying. There is an amusing skit on "Charming" people by the "Kayes" when they are preparing Tip-Toes to create a dazzling sensation among the millionaires, the burden of their song being that as other people can be "charming," there is no reason why they should not make themselves "charming" too. Example was ever better than precept! At intervals during the various scenes the chorus rushes on like a rolling tornado, and the liveliness gets very fierce indeed. Miss Peggy Beatty and Miss Rita McLean give special dances which are not only bright and lively samples of their kind, but which also seem to give confirmation to the interesting rumour that nobody wears petticoats nowadays. Tip-Toes is a musical comedy which is undoubtedly well qualified to maintain the successful record of the Winter Garden Theatre. "THE NIGHTMARE COURSE"

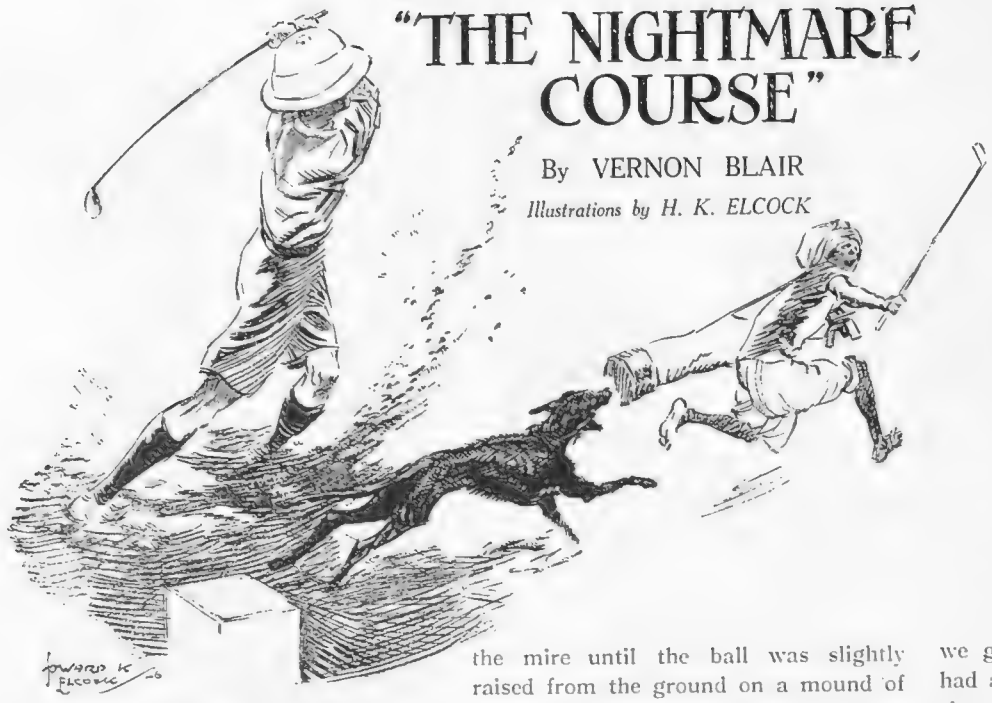
By VERNON BLAIR

Illustrations by H. K. ELCOCK



A reply from a reader in India to "A Dream Holiday" by Dell Leigh, in a recent issue of "The Bystander"

THE BYSTANDER has just dropped on to the floor with the rest of the English mail. It is dated August 18, and please, Mr. Leigh, please don't do it any more . . . I think I know the golf course . . . "The red flags on the greens hang limp on their pins. Some Machiavellian hand laid out those links several hundred years ago. The man who does a good score on them prattles deservedly about it for a week after; the man who fails comforts himself at lunch by saying: 'Well, they're deuced difficult, you know.' And he is quite right . . ." Please, Mr. Leigh, don't do it any more . . . As I say, and as everybody else will say, for everyone has a dream golf course, I think I know those links. I was one of the conspicuous failures, and I, too, comforted myself at lunch by remembering that they were "deuced difficult." And so . . .

The rain had ceased sufficiently for us to expect the game that we call, for we are imaginative as well as courageous, golf. At five, for it was too hot in the rain to play with comfort before, we tramped along the sodden road, a coolie behind with the two bags. A small boy saw our approach, hastened back to the caddy master, and, having the qualification of being the caddie master's nephew, secured the position of caddie to one of us. The rest was in the cruel hands of Fate. A horde of small boys clamoured for the honour of losing sight of our balls as they sped over the sodden turf. (For there is turf on the dream course now—a fact that has reduced my drive from the 200 yards customary in the hot weather to a mere 100.) We waded to the first tee, persuaded one of the caddies to play in the mire until the ball was slightly raised from the ground on a mound of untidy wet mud, and made the usual preparations for hitting the ball. These consisted of shouting to the forward caddies to cease playing in the stream and to come many yards nearer, telling the caddies to stop talking, ushering off a pi-dog from the immediate vicinity, securing a foothold for ourselves on the swamp, and clearing the course of a string of men, women and children who were slowly wending their way across the path in front. (There is no creature so capable of committing suicide as an Indian intent upon getting out of the way of a mad Sahib with a driver in his hands.) It was then found that the ball had fallen off the tee. More mud larking. We drove. Immediately tumult broke out anew. The dog chased the pink soles of the forward caddie's chocolate feet, and contemplated a feast of good Indian leg. George was in a different hole from mine—less deep. At the sixth attempt to emerge I found that my caddie had handed me a putter. And thus, playing a snappy eighth, we reached the alleged green. Play, Mr. Leigh, on your dream courses. Play morning and afternoon, day after day; talk your battles over again in the smoke-room of your dream hotel every night, but remember that you have a green that is green. That is, moreover, of grass. Remember that you use a putter on the green, whereas . . .

"We reached the alleged green"

After we had both played ten, we were appreciably nearer the hole. The tin had sunk a little into the grey sand that had the cloying capacity of chocolate, defying my mashie to lift the ball. The first three attempts to hit the back of the hole failed owing to the fact that the tin formed an encircling guard, incapable of allowing a ball to pass. And it was George's hole.

At the third it began to rain, and we gave up putting. At the sixth we had a slight quarrel owing to George's slowness. How he can expect to have the peace of mind of Gleneagles on our course I cannot fathom. At the eighth we gave up going for the greens—which have no red flags and very few pins, Mr. Leigh—and decided to drive only. And after that we gave up. The fans had stopped out of spite when we returned, and there was no soda-water.

And yet . . . I think it would be excellent training for many of Mr. Leigh's readers to play on our course. I think they would like the tees, the arm wavings, the casual water that seems determined rather than casual. The railway hole, where there is always a goods train and a stream of people going nowhere. The peculiar ingenuity of the eighth, where the best course is to drive straight down the road and so round the clump of trees on to the green. They would benefit enormously from the diversions. For I am sure that I, who used to be put off by a worm turning a hundred yards away, for I have a horror of audiences, could now face a battery of clicking cameras as I swing down in the old devastating way. Nothing could put me off. No question of balance or attention to detail like that. No worry from slice or pull. No bunkers higher than a few inches, and beautiful niblick putts when the sand that lies so thick and cloying on the greens is wet. No plus fours, but shorts. No lying on the greens to sight a putt. No unnecessary swinging or addressing of the ball, for the rain is falling fast and it is very dark. No big umbrellas for you, for what good are they in a monsoon shower? In fact, hardly any golf.

And I, too, will be selfish and refuse to tell you the name of this course, this dream course, this nightmare scene of the great God Goof . . .

V.—KITTY-THE-CAT

By E. P. LEIGH-BENNETT Illustration by H. K. ELCOCK

KITTY is at her best at the Kit Cat Club, because she moves so well; and this popular place is essentially for those who prefer wide, open spaces for languid arrivals and unruffled departures. Also she purrs upon her partner from time to time in a manner which seems to me, watching without illusions from an adjacent table, to be almost feline. To him it appears a smile of peculiar dazzlement and contentment with life in general and his propinquity in particular.

Kitty Legion—for her name is almost that—had a husband once. He died most conveniently early in the proceedings ("in that 'flu epidemic, you remember, but don't let us be depressing, for goodness sake"), and now she is alone, presumably with her conscience, which sits as lightly upon her as that thin, half-discarded peacock-blue wrap about her milk-white shoulders.

One does not see much of Kitty in the day time, because most of us are minding our own business until the hour when hospitable ladies in flats begin to shake those nickel-plated urns, and we "roll up," to find her already in possession of our hostess. It may be an awkward or a welcome moment when you appear, you can never tell. But, roughly speaking, if the lady to whom you have come to pay homage, and to receive in return a dry-Martini-with-a-dash, is hearing from Kitty's lips about her shortcomings, she is terribly pleased to see you, and says, "Leigh, darling, how nice of you to come round; I haven't seen you for such an age," giving you a glance as if you were the only man who mattered in the two hemispheres. If, on the other hand, some other woman's deficiencies are being laid bare by that metallic voice, you are distinctly one too many at the moment; and all you get is a flat-toned, "Hullo, old thing, I thought you were going away?" which is an unspoken equivalent of "I wish to heaven you had." For your entry has broken the thread of Kitty's broadcasting, which was on the point of becoming really interesting and exclusively intimate; one of those pearls of publicity which begin, "This is strictly between ourselves and you won't repeat it, dear, will you? I know I can rely on you."

For Kitty, you must understand, is invariably disappointed in people (never in herself, of course), and says so on all occasions. She has just said to the cocktail-shaking lady, "You know, Biddy, dearest, you are not the woman you used to be." Biddy glances up quickly at the mirror with a rather hunted expression in her eyes. "No, I don't mean physically; you're still lovely—isn't she Mr., I didn't catch your name? I mean mentally. You are all wrong, dear. You have become terribly hard. It's all these late nights . . . may I have some ice in this? Thanks. You are getting rather like Doris Darenotte: now that woman . . ."

It is at this point that the wise man swallows his poison hurriedly and leaves. His attempt at an exit draws a conventional remonstrance from Biddy: "You're not going yet? Oh, don't go, please." To which Kitty-the-Cat purrs, "Never press a man to stay, dear: a great mistake: gives the show away: I never do, believe me." Thereby making your hostess feel rather small, as was intended. During the ice-bound leave-takings you have heard her say, "Yes, I'm dining with that crashing bore, Freddie Fane—isn't it awful? Why do we do these things? . . ." And here she is, all lit up in pale carnation pink, a beautifully soft colour, in deep contrast with the line of her mouth; silver-grey stockings and shoes. Her blonde hair is Etoned, and brushed back with a rigidity entirely out of keeping with the quality of her mind.

The Kit Cat is a dance club with that soothing influence which mellows the tired mind. The cramped Londoner finds here under those seven huge, fickle lamps a respite from the jostle and surge of other places round the other corners of Mayfair. You gaze down from the wide, isolated gallery upon a shimmering plain of parquet. The band, though large and compelling, is not, as it were, on top of you. You have but to whisper in this gallery, or in those deeply recessed alcoves, and she will hear you, and, with luck, she will whisper back, and all will be well. The pale café-au-lait colouring is neutrally non-obtrusive The ubiquitous waiters are far away until beckoned. Soso, the smiling, efficient Maître, appears only from some invisibility when summoned. The changeful colours of those luscious lamps, turning from blood-red to lilac, to jade-green, to cyclamen, to the palest of blues, seem to smooth out the creases in your meditations. The place is full of peace.

But there is a warring element disturbingly close—Kitty. You hardly know her. You have never dined with her (heaven forbid)—but you know her type. Someone, you feel certain, is being mentally torn to shreds. As she is generally to be seen with an insipid young man, to whom she could give several years in age and experience, he is prone to believe what he hears, and will probably pass it on. Her young men have two distinguishing marks upon them always; very wide dress trousers and very sleek hair. A third attribute: they never get hot when dancing. They will remain immaculate until the crack of doom. What their posture will be then, the gods only know.

They give fans away at the Kit Cat A woman can brew a lot of trouble with a fan. Kitty's play with her fan would make a Madrid lady smile pityingly. Her fingers moving that fan show her boredom, her trepidations, ambitions, inhibitions. But behind the motions is being breathed poison, insidious and insistent. She has just pointed Mike Malvern out to her youthful host. Mike is dancing with Sybil Sellier, from the chorus of "Say When," at the "Soho." She has said:

"Just look at that Malvern man, spreading his fingers across that girl's back. Why does she allow it?"

But poor Mike, if the truth were known (when is it?), is a poor dancer, in spite of his new yellow "Phantom"; and his possessive air with the star of the "Soho" firmament is in reality just nerves and a desire to compete successfully with younger men.

Kitty takes the floor when the alluring lights begin to change colour. It is an imposing entry down that wide staircase, especially when the dominant colour is oyster-grey turning to lemon, and diners sitting about are duly impressed. Conspicuous dancers they both are: he has been brought here for that purpose. That long, quick slide, don't you know, a smooth run round the room with that attractive side "feather" step. Nice minded people on all sides are saying complimentary things about both of them, because there is nobody else on the floor at the moment who can compare with this couple. All she says, as they mount the stairs again to their gallery table is, "Dreadful, isn't it, how few of these people know the first principles of dancing?"

In the midst of the crashing boredom, suddenly you see her whole body become alert to interested attention as she gazes down at some new arrivals. Estelle Exe has just come in, with Philip Slade Mr. Exe is in a nursing home in Fitzroy Square, missing his appendix frightfully. Now this is very interesting—and Kitty cranes forward a trifle.

Three days afterwards, while the bridge hands are being dealt at the club, Kitty says sweetly to Margery Slade, on her left:

"How well your husband does the Charleston, my dear: did you teach him? Where did I see him? I can't remember for the moment; somewhere or other, the other night."

And then she falls into an innocent reverie over her cards.

While this poison is percolating slowly through a jealous wife's system, causing her to double a sitting two no trumps, she presently looses yet another dart while shuffling a pack, thus:—

"Has anyone seen Estelle to-day, by the way? She had on such a duck of a frock the other night, I want to know who her woman is now. . . . Two hearts."

Out of a corner of her eye she has observed Margery stiffen ever such a little. The dart has found its target.

And over Kitty spreads that same feeling a cat has when you stroke its back. E. P. L.-B

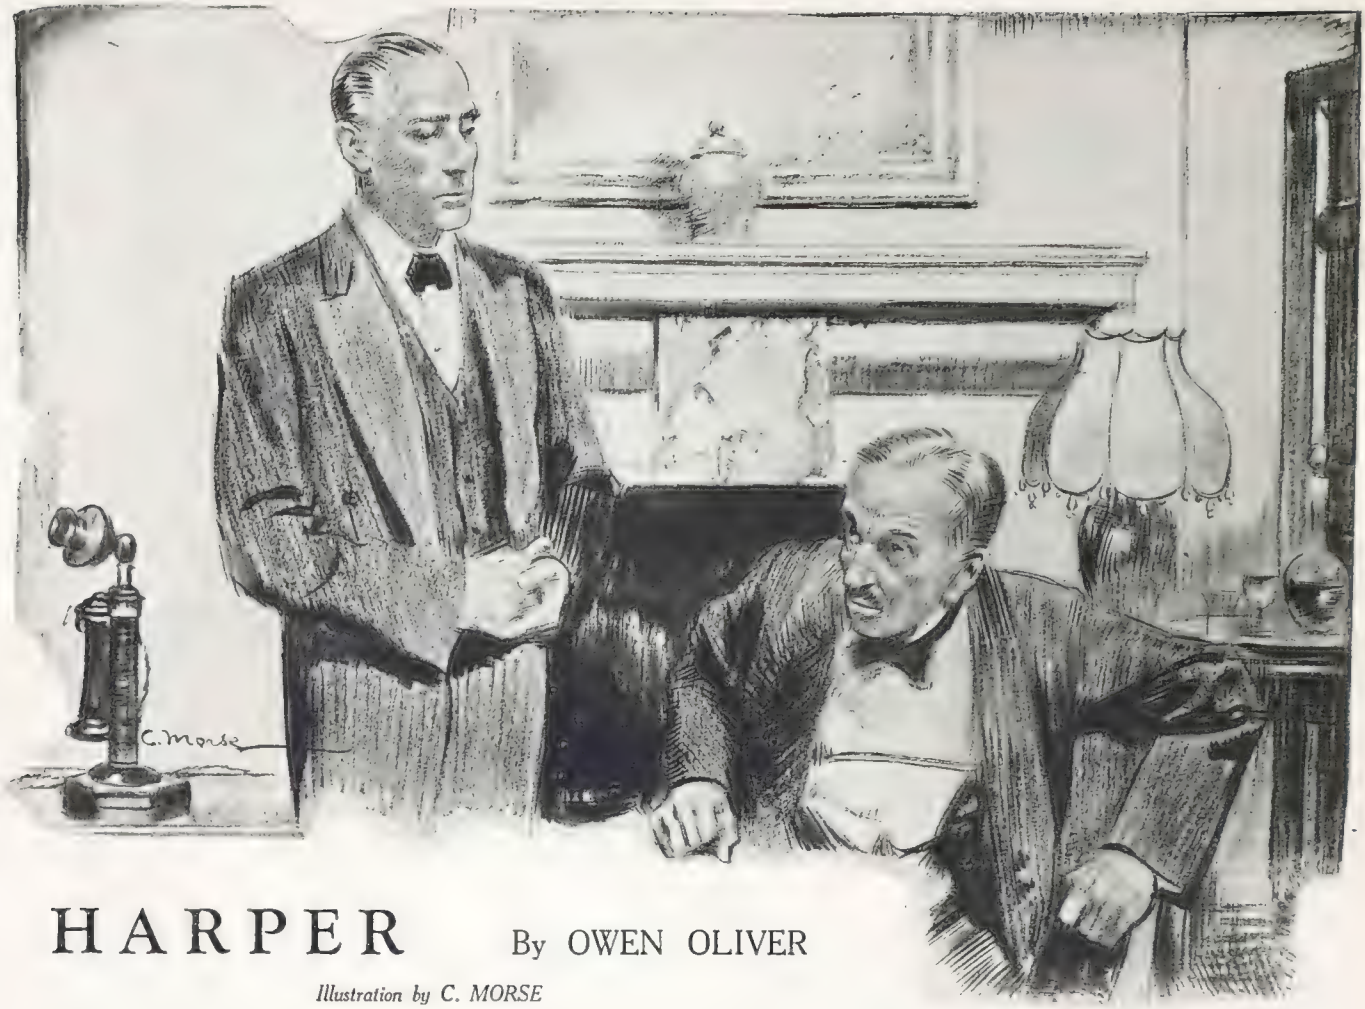
DORMY ONE!



HARPER

By OWEN OLIVER

Illustration by C. MORSE

FESHLING was taking off his coat when the bedside telephone rang. He started nervously and jerked his arms back into the sleeves; started again at his own image in the mirror; an apprehensive-looking little man of forty-five, grey before his time.

His teeth chattered and he swayed while he listened to the message. He managed to jerk out, "Thank you." Then he dropped into the armchair with his arms hanging limply over the side. Presently he raised one and rang the electric bell upon the adjacent table.

In a few seconds his big, competent, unworried-looking valet appeared.

"Thought you were going to bed, sir," he said.

"I've had a telegram delivered by 'phone, Laxon," Feshling groaned. "Midnight. Harper."

They stared at each other for ten seconds in silence, except for Feshling's fingers drumming upon the table.

"Seems as there's no escaping him," the valet muttered.

"Don't talk like that, Laxon," Feshling cried. "He'd kill me; kill me. . . You must keep him off me somehow."

"You've been running from him for fifteen years," the valet protested. "It's worn you to a shadow of yourself; broke you up. You'd best face him and settle things once for all."

"Man, I tell you he'll kill me!"

"I've thought lately, sir, since the worry brought on neuritis, or whatever it is, you might be happier out of it."

"Good God, Laxon! You don't suggest——?"

"Well, sir, what sort of life is it for you; or for me, come to that? It's always the same. He's playing cat and mouse with you; lets you get just to the point when you're going to handle the fortune that I'm to have 10 per cent. of, and then he sends a threat, and you run away. Run away and leave evidence behind that will make others look for you. Don't forget the times when you've been more worried about the police than this man Harper. On your own showing you're due for about thirty-five years, unless the sentences run concurrently! It's time an end was made of it one way or another. If you haven't had enough of it, I have; and warned you before that I thought of looking for another job."

"Laxon, you wouldn't desert me!" Feshling pleaded.

"I can't stand the strain any longer, sir. Whenever a wire comes, and you ring for me afterwards, I go all of a sweat — begging your pardon, sir. 'Harper again,' I think. All I was to share is lost; and we'll pack up and run in the night like thieves—well, one that was going to be, and his accomplice, they'll say."

"There's nothing to incriminate you, Laxon," his master declared.

"They'd say that what little I've put by has come out of your companies. But I'm speaking of you, not myself. I don't go about fearing my shadow. I don't look round every corner. I don't start at every voice and listen for every noise, or fasten up two chains and two bolts and double lock my door at night. There's nothing screaming on my conscience!"

"It isn't conscience that screams at me," Feshling denied. "It's that murderous brute. . . . No sense of justice!"

"I make out he has just ground for feeling murderous," the valet remarked. "If I had a wife and someone ran off with her, I might feel like it myself."

"If a man's wife runs off," Feshling said, "he ought to put the blame on her. I owed nothing to him; didn't even know him. . . . Laxon, you must keep him away from me this time. You've seen what he is from his letters and telegrams."

"I never saw any definite threat to kill you in them," the valet remarked.

"That was in the first, the one that I found on my dressing-table, before I engaged you. I told you of that."

"Not what he said, sir; only that you were threatened by a strong and desperate man; and that you took me on for a sort of valet-guard, being a powerful man; and no nerves. Which I hadn't, but I don't feel quite the same after fifteen years. . . . He was definite that time, eh? "

(All rights strictly reserved)

"I'll tell you the threat word for word," Feshling muttered. "It wasn't that I wanted to keep anything from you; only that it upset me to repeat it. . . . 'Some day I shall kill you; but I will do worse first.—Harper.' . . . He is a big, powerful man."

Feshling shivered.

"As big and powerful as me, sir? "

"I never saw him, but he was doing a strong man turn on the halls. Ikon the Ironbreaker! He was touring when I met his hussy of a wife."

"Hussy, was she? From what you've said, I didn't gather that."

"That or a fool. Tried to put pressure on me to marry her when he divorced her, anyhow."

"And you didn't——? "

"Me marry her! Why . . . well, this isn't the time for history. There's only about a quarter of an hour. What's to be done? "

"Well. . . . Midnight, he says. . . . If he wants you then, he's got to get into this house. He can't come in at the door. A man who comes any other way lays himself open to be taken for a burglar. . . . Suppose anyone says, 'Stop, or I shoot,' and says it just after he fires? "

"Ah! . . . You will? "

"It's your affair, not mine, sir."

"Yes, yes. . . . But my nerves are bad. I should miss him, and he'd spring on me, and . . . Ikon the Ironbreaker! Ugh! . . . Your nerves are all right, Laxon, and you're a strong man, a very strong man. You stay in this room with me and have the revolver. Be steady when you shoot—I'll bear you out that you challenged first, and he rushed at us—and you shall have 12½ per cent. of what I get off with. That's an eighth, you know."

"I'm not going to risk the gallows for any per cent. of anything, sir," the valet refused.

"Then put some things together quickly," Feshling implored, "and take me off in the motor."

"And leave everything! Then there'll be nothing to have a per cent. of—as usual! "

"I'll start something fresh, Laxon. You know I have a nose for fools."

"And Harper has a nose for you! " the valet growled; "and you never get out of scent of it. Can't you see that after fifteen years? He just lets you think you've escaped him to torment you more; waits till you've nearly got something in your hands; then threatens to drop on you; and you cut and run, and don't make a fight of it, like a man."

"What chance have I against a gorilla who made a living out of his brute strength? His wife said he'd twist a poker into a snake bracelet for her arm."

"Just knack," Laxon suggested.

"Knack that would break my neck! " Feshling cried. He shuddered. "No wonder I haven't slept properly for years. That's what's done my nerve in. . . . But you think, with a revolver——? . . . You'd stand by, of course? And swear that he was a murderous burglar, who attacked me? "

"But suppose it came out that he was the husband of the lady you took off? There'd be a prejudice against you; and me, if I backed you up."

"No one thinks any worse of a man for a thing like that," Feshling asserted. "The woman tempted and he ate! "

"Some have a prejudice against him if he doesn't marry her afterwards, and she dies soon," Laxon muttered. "Seems from one of his letters—the one pinned to your pillow in the hotel—as if he has a prejudice about that. Fond of the gal, perhaps."

"I'll face prejudice to save my life," Feshling declared. "If only I thought I'd shoot straight. . . . Laxon, you take the revolver. If you kill him I'll make it 20 per cent.; 20 per cent. as long as you stay with me."

"Ah! " The valet laughed grimly. "You might think you didn't need me when he was gone. One who doesn't keep faith with his woman doesn't keep it with his man."

"I would, Laxon. I would. I'll put it in writing; make it 25 per cent. That's a quarter."

"I'm not risking my neck for a quarter, or for half, or the whole. Remember, there's more than Harper after you. There'd be a fuss over him, and enquiries about you, and likely enough he'll have left evidence to trace you, which he must have, as he's done it. It doesn't follow that you'll be free from him after he's dead."

"First," Feshling groaned, "you say that my only hope is to kill him. Then you say there's no hope in that! You're as bad as he is at playing cat and mouse with me."

"You can be rid of me, sir. I'm fed up with it. I see he'll never let your hopes come to anything; and when he finds you've none left, he'll think the time has come for settling with you. There'll never be anything to draw my per cent. on. So, if you'll accept my notice——"

Feshling screamed, clutched his valet

"Laxon, if you desert me now, all you'll have done will be to have kept me alive for fifteen years' torture. If I hadn't had you I'd be dead now; dead of fear; out of my misery. Don't go till I'm free from him."

"You'll never be free from him, sir," Laxon declared. "If you haven't learnt that yet, I have. What he says he'll do he does. He says midnight to-night, and he'll come. I'm not going to stay and be killed for you, or be hanged or put in prison for killing him."

"I'll make it 30 per cent., Laxon." The valet shook his head slowly. "Forty per cent." The valet shook his head again. "Fifty? That's half and half. . . . For the love of Heaven, save me, Laxon."

"Not for the love of Heaven, I can't," Laxon declared; "and there's only one thing can."

"What's that? "

"The law," the valet said.

"What? " Feshling screamed.

"Go round and give yourself up at the police station. He can't get you there. There's a warrant out for you under the name of——"

"I know, I know! " Feshling wrung his hands. "I won't. . . . Besides, he'd be waiting outside the house and catch me. I'd never get there."

"Then 'phone and say you're Barkson, and let them fetch you."

"You're mad! I'd get five or seven years. . . . Even if they didn't connect me with the other cases . . ."

"Seems to be a choice between your liberty and your life. . . . You've got to face it. Suppose you escaped him tonight. How long are you going on in the state you're in? I warned you last time that you wouldn't stand another go like it. Harper, like enough, sees that too; that he's got to settle with you now, or you won't be here for settlement. And, if you ask me, killing ain't what's in his mind, or he'd have done it before now."

"You think he won't kill me? " Feshling grasped his valet's arm.

"Not unless he can't punish you enough in any other way. I'd expect him to give you the choice; death or prison. I'd take death; but you won't. I know you, after fifteen years."

"But——" Feshling gasped. "Prison——? For years . . . ! "

He sank into the armchair and put his face in his hands.

"But death! " the valet said. "At twelve o'clock. . . . It wants four minutes. . . ."

"He can't get in," Feshling screamed. "I searched the house, locked all the doors. . . . You must stay with me. You must, Laxon. I'll share half and half with you. I swear it. We'll prove that he can't do what he says. . . . Lock that door. Both locks." Laxon obeyed. "Now the bolts." Laxon shot them noisily. "Now the chains." Laxon did them, shrugging his shoulders. "Let's stand right away from the window in case he throws a bomb. . . . What are you laughing at? "

"I am Harper," said the valet.

We need a brilliant man to restore our air supremacy, writes an expert. We should have thought there were enough air restorers on the market.

The Hon. P.: Did she seem pretty fit?

Lady Di.: Well, of course, she's aged fearfully.

The Hon. P.: Yes; I'm not fond of her either.

Lady Di.: Did you hear her sing in Act I? Clean off the note! And her dancing!

The Hon. P.: To tell you the truth, I only got in just before the bar was closed. Beastly rude some of those chaps in the stalls. I couldn't help barging by 'em.

Lady Di.: I know. And when I was telling my neighbour that my new frock simply suits me down to the knees, someone in the pit—the pit, mark you!—actually had the cheek to say, "Shut up!"

The Hon. P.: Rotten bad form. And look here, when I started yawning that comedian fellow absolutely glared at me.

Lady Di.: Some of these stage people seem to think we want to watch their bally show. Well, what about pushing off and shaking a leg somewhere?

The Hon. P.: Sorry, old Fruit; but as a matter of fact I've got to go and write a notice about the rotten show!

"Through drops of perspiration"

Mes Amis—

I begin to think we have an advantage over you in respect of the caractère of our tax-collectors. Your tax-gatherers are undoubtedly more efficient, but they are strict business men, stern of visage and of purpose, whereas les nôtres have fully qualified for the rôle of humorists.

One would have imagined that the octroi men of Caen the quaint, who demand a deposit of a franc and a half for permitting you to convey two chickens morts through their two main streets, and refund the money as you go through the barrière, would have stood alone as taxation comedians. But it appears that they are really in the lower ranks of the comics. As witness the experience of a resident of the outer Parisian suburbs, who is a musician in a Paris orchestra but also earns money by musical activities in his home district. On such earnings he had loyally paid income-tax, but the local "imposer" called upon him to pay four hundred francs more as a tailor who makes up customers' lengths of cloth. The musician sought out the inquisitor and informed him that he had never even employed a needle to sew on a button, but the Authority responded, "You must pay and then reclaim," and, when the musician not unnaturally got out of harmony and began to argue, suggested, "Why not make yourself a tailor and then you wouldn't have any grievance at all!"

"Insisted on listing him as a tailor"

Alternatively, the musician, becoming rather cynical, proposed that he should be taxed as a millionaire, when he would be able to display his feuille de contributions to all the local shopkeepers and, on the strength of it, obtain unlimited credit. But the tax-collector, thoroughly content with the joke as developed in his conception, insisted on listing him as a tailor. Why, the victim was quite unable to learn. His name has not even any likeness to tailoring. And there is nothing flattering to a musician, in his eyes, in being tabulated officially as a tailor, while he might have been quite eager to pay for the temporary dignity of being listed as a romancier, a diplomate or even a poète.

Mystery is afoot in the camp of the dressmakers. They have scented the danger of killing the goose that lays the golden eggs, and they are about to try cunning remedies before it is too late. These have not yet been revealed in detail, and may look better when disclosed in full, for, as presented in outline, they appear liable to strike a snag.

Their problem stands like this. While they are selling more robes than ever and, consequent on the high prices obtainable, are making more money than ever, they have lost the clients who are their best advertisement, namely the Parisiennes. In view of native financial difficulties only a severely limited few among Parisiennes can now afford to wear the creations of the class of couturiers who sign their models. Maybe they might not have worried too much about this, being commerçants primarily, but the British and American customers have begun to introduce posers. "Your models are charming," they would say, "and we really like them immensely,

Some glimpses of the amusing people who are doing their bit for the Brighter London movement in "Merry-Go-Round" at the Trocadero. This clever cabaret show, which is one of Mr. C. B. Cochran's productions, ranges lightly over widely varied subjects, from Life in Nelson's Day to a Tragedy in the Chicken Run but we don't see Parisiennes wearing them. We prefer to wear what Parisiennes wear."

FACED with the obvious danger resulting from this situation, dressmakers and manufacturers have agreed on a combine, and propose to offer exclusive models made of the finest materials at fifty per cent. lower prices to Parisiennes in order that the Parisiennes' taste shall remain available as an advertisement. But suppose Parisiennes decide to do a little re-selling?

MAURICE YVAIN, who probably moves more French feet than any other French composer does, with his trick of discovering a lilt that dancers find irresistible, is about to cease to be popular among lyric writers, I fear, as he is at present engaged in penning the lyrics for his next operette himself, down in the seclusion of his Cap d'Antibes villa.

YVAIN has a theory that "certain accents, reticences, intentions and effects in modern light music can only be rendered verbally by him who has conceived them musically." Which may be all very well if he has as good a gift for appropriate words as he has for musical themes. That is open to a very big doubt after the hopeless doggerel efforts of some of the American composers. Even the man who made all the world admit the possibility of being all alone by a telephone, the skilled Irving Berlin himself, has perpetrated "words" to his music which require a lot of swallowing. And then there was the gentleman who made the grass grow greener as the simplest method of rhyming with Pasadena, where the grass is probably mostly brown. If Yvain inflicts anything like this on Paris, ça ira mal.

"Your models are charming . . "

THERE has lately been published a book about Paris which is probably the best "close-up" of the Gay City that has been written in English since Paris contracted the après-guerre fever.

"For the rôle of humorists"

This is "The Cockpit of Peace," by Ferdinand Tuohy, the cleverness of the title being a good guide to the quality of the contents.

JUST now there seems to be a definite move on the part of music-hall managers to create a kind of League of Nations in their revues, with one étoile to appeal particularly to one race and others to other races. The Moulin Rouge gave the impetus, and now the Palace, which makes a habit of not neglecting other people's ideas, has developed it much further.

IN the new revue, "Palace aux Femmes," Jenny Golder, an Australian with a Yorkshire accent on her French, is intended to appeal to British auditors. Harry Pilcer, whose French recalls Manhattan, looks after American interests, Spadaro is the attraction for the Spaniards and their South American cousins, and the leading French comedian, Dranem, sings songs which can be understood by the few natives who may unexpectedly drop in. When they operate together they can generate high spirits, and there are some very well-coloured tableaux that are worth seeing—when vision is possible through drops of perspiration. Would that the Palace might install some more electric fans!

A BYSTANDER among the BOOKS

by Ralph Straus

MR. DONALD MAXWELL'S discovery of England continues apace, and his trophies multiply in the most exhilarating way. You will be familiar by this time with his methods. With his friend Brown, a second cousin, I suspect, of the late Mrs. 'Arris, and in a small boat called the Pelican, he sets out to survey uncharted rivers, buried towns, churches which the motorists have not yet discovered, and Oldest Inhabitants who have not yet been interviewed. Instead of a gun he carries a sketch-book, and if anything goes wrong there is always the inoffensive, if learned, Brown to take the blame.

In this way many of England's lost counties have been replaced on the map, and to their number must now be added Unknown Suffolk (Lane: 15*s.* net), a delightful book such as only Mr. Maxwell—or is it Brown?—can write. In Suffolk, it would seem, the natives are divided into two jealous sub-races, the East and the West, but both combine to do honour to a stranger. Here, too, rivers get unaccountably mislaid, castles forget that it is their duty to be excavated, and green children spring out of the ground. Also the East Coast, according to Brown, is constantly misbehaving. Indeed such a good traveller as King John would probably lose his way were he to trek north-eastwards to-day from the Thames Valley to the Wash.

Seriously speaking, these books of Maxwell's are a sheer delight. There is a delicacy about his draughtsmanship which lends distinction to even his roughest sketch. And he can find beauty in the unlikeliest spots. As in the earlier volumes, too, we are given a number of illustrations in colour, which, if I had my way, should be issued in duplicate, for they cry aloud for a frame. May these explorations of his long continue.

S

YOU will find the cheeriest record of sport on moor and lake and field in Capt. Allan Bacon's book Enchanted Days with Rod and Gun (Seeley, Service: 12*s.* 6*d.* net). It does not seem to have mattered much where the author has happened to find himself—at home or abroad, in the Highlands or down in Hampshire—he has enjoyed the sport that is sport. I was particularly interested, too, in his chapters on the legal aspect of things. The law has a habit of being complicated about things which you take more or less for granted, and the author is breaking fresh ground when he is leaving rod and gun for a while and talking of buff papers and things of that kind. If you like walking your birds, or know anything about flies, you will find the book much to your liking.

S

INCIDENTALLY, too, you should read Mr. Waugh in another and more gracious mood. On Doing What One Likes (Cayme Press: 7*s.* 6*d.* net) is a series of entertaining dissertations on various aspects of life. The younger generation likes to think for itself, and is not always ready to accept the "good old" views. Here you may watch Mr. Waugh more or less doing what he pleases, holidaying in Norway, playing village cricket, reading books, or not reading them as the case may be, getting his money's worth, buying presents, and looking forward three centuries hence. It is a leisurely, likeable book.

ONE of the most intriguing points about Mr. Basil Macdonald Hastings's work is its astonishing variety. You never quite know what he will be doing next. A few months ago I was mentioning him as essayist and novel writer: now he appears as a recorder of youth. Memoirs of a Child (Philpot: 8*s.* 6*d.* net) is the quaintest of books. It is the simple panorama of a large family of youngsters who were no better and certainly no worse than are the majority of other children. There is no particular story, and none is needed. Mr. Hastings would have us take it as a true picture, and it certainly reads like the truth.

And what jolly young things they all are, especially when they are in the midst of those nefarious designs against their elders and betters, which, in real life, can be such a nuisance. (We do get so superior sometimes.) Sisters fight against brothers with the utmost ferocity—this comes as rather a shock, until we remember that such internecine warfare, though rarely mentioned in the books, is the commonest occurrence—lessons are shown to be the extraordinarily stupid things that every child knows them to be, and the interests of grown-ups are exhibited in all their intolerable dullness!

He is the moving spirit, and part author with "Seamark," of "London's Potinière" at the Little Theatre. His other contributions to the stage include the part authorship of "Life" at the Palladium, the semi-finale, "Mary-Rose-Marie" in the Co-Optimist's programme, and items in "R.S.V.P." at the Vaudeville

An announcement of importance to lovers of pearls

FROM the day when the House of Técla first amazed pearl-lovers by creating these inimitable treasures in their own laboratories, one experiment after another has resulted in the attainment of absolute perfection in pearlcraft.

But the very latest discovery born of Técla research will undoubtedly have more far-reaching results than all past efforts, for it has now become possible for Técla Pearls, with all their supreme qualities, to be offered at considerably less than their former prices.

How this has been attained is, like the processes for creating Técla Pearls, an exclusive secret. But it is now an accomplished fact that Técla Pearls are within the means of almost everyone. A Técla necklace can now be obtained for £3 3s. And that is a momentous achievement.

As in the past, Técla Pearls bear the far-reaching guarantee of a House that has for a quarter of a century held the supreme position in the art of pearl reproduction.

All pearl-lovers are invited to visit the Técla Salon and inspect these choice creations of modern research. There they can also see the fine collection of Técla Gems, including reproductions of Rubies, Emeralds and Sapphires, mounted with genuine diamonds, in platinum and gold settings, individual in character and of exquisite design. A Post order department has been opened for the convenience of those unable to pay a personal visit.

HUNTING NOTES

By A. W. COATEN

With the Badminton

FROM the Badminton country I have bright accounts of the season's outlook. Cub-hunting began in the middle of August, and the Duke of Beaufort is pleased with the show of foxes so far. He gives every promise of being as successful an M.F.H. as his father was before him. The chances of good sport are highly favourable on both sides of the Vale of White Horse, while Major Wingfield Digby is sanguine of another first-rate season with the Blackmore Vale, where, as I mentioned last week, foot-and-mouth troubles form the only cloud on the horizon.

MAJOR E. LONGUEVILLE

Who is hunting the Radnorshire and West Hereford Hounds this season. He has been Master since 1913

Happily these are now disappearing. The outbreak occurred in the Sparkford Vale, one of the choicest fox-hunting areas in the kingdom. No further case has been reported there for more than a month, and I was glad to hear from the Master a few days ago to the effect that the Sparkford Vale will shortly be hunted over as usual. There is an excellent show of foxes, but the ground is still undesirably hard for cub-hunting and scent very poor. This will improve with rain, which is badly needed all over England at the time of writing.

Irish Prospects

IN the old days it was customary for many English people to enjoy their hunting in Ireland, where they have oceans of grass in the leading countries, and wire worries are almost unknown. Political upheavals and the departure of English troops from Irish stations have done much to change the personnel of the hunting field there. Now that things have settled down efforts are being made to attract some of those who formerly spent the winter in Ireland for the hunting. One of the strongest attractions they can offer is that no stoppages from foot-and-mouth restrictions need be feared. The famous Meath Hounds are now being hunted by Capt. R. H. Fowler and Lord Holmpatrick, while the "killing" Kildares have been taken over by Sir Thomas Ainsworth, who had the Galway Blazers last season. If we have many more prolonged checks to sport in England on account of cattle disease there will be a sharp revival in the prosperity of the best Irish countries.

Some More Changes

IRELAND possesses an enthusiastic lady Master in the person of Mrs. W. Hall, of the Carlow. We gave a picture of that keen sportswoman and some of her prize-winning hounds in our Special Hunting Section last week. The Ladies Blanche and Katherine Beresford are no longer joint Masters of the Waterford. They are succeeded by Mr. J. R. Russell, who proposes to hunt the hounds himself with the assistance of his son as whipper-in. I would like to note one or two other changes of which news did not reach us in time to be recorded in our List of Foxhounds. Major H. Connop, a fox-hunter of considerable experience, is the new Master of the Wilton Hounds, and the prospects of sport with this pack are said to be most encouraging. The new M.F.H. will be his own huntsman, and is well qualified to fill that position with success. Mr. J. E. B. Lethbridge has accepted the command of the Lamerton country, and will hunt hounds himself.

A Splendid Veteran

HEARTY congratulations to that grand veteran of the Chase, Lord North, on the celebration of the ninetieth anniversary of his birth. It was a happy idea to arrange a meet of his Basset Hounds on his birthday at Wroxton Abbey, where hundreds of friends, including most of the local farmers and their wives, came to congratulate the old sportsman and wish him continued good health. Lord North followed the hounds in his carriage for a couple of hours, and seemed to be as keenly interested as ever in their performances.

PERFECT SON

A caricature of Sir Alfred Butt, whose horse is a very strong fancy for to-day's Cesarewitch

This Week's Big Event

THERE was a time when the Cesarewitch seemed likely to fall below its usual standard of interest, but events have shaped themselves favourably, and we are now looking forward to this great test of stamina with customary keenness. A great amount of money has already been wagered on the race. Perhaps backers are letting themselves go a little more than is their wont on account of the impending betting tax. The idea seems to be to have some final flutters this month before the Inland Revenue gets busy. Not that I think the new tax is going to make all the difference to betting and racing that the pessimists declare it will do. We shall get quite accustomed to it in time just as we have become accustomed to paying more for our drinks and our smokes. Anyway, we find the Cesarewitch with several heavily backed competitors, and a vast sum depends on the result of the race.

The Top Weights

EVER since Glommen escaped a penalty for the handicap by getting himself disqualified at Doncaster he has been the strongest order for this week's race. It is, however, by no means certain that he will remain as undisputed favourite to the last. Foxlaw is carrying a pile of money and this in spite of the fact that he will have 10lb. more on his back than the handicapper set him to bear. One of the most amazing things that have happened in racing for a long time was when Foxlaw scored a fortnight ago. I am not quite sure that we ought to be carried away by the glamour of his success in the Jockey Club Stakes. For one thing, Solario was certainly not himself owing to the hard ground, while Foliation had her chance of winning as good as settled when the favourite rolled on to her. Without doubt Foxlaw is a greatly improved colt, and I know his owner is brimful of confidence, but, rightly or wrongly, I hold the view that both this colt and Glommen have too much weight.

Two Likely Ones

WE are bound to hold Perfect Son in respect. He is in the hands of one of the cleverest trainers of the day. Stanley Wootton, according to all accounts, has tried this colt to be something like a good thing for the Cesarewitch, and Sir Alfred Butt and his friends have betted accordingly. Epsom is not the best place in the country at which to train a Cesarewitch horse, especially in such a dry spell as we have lately experienced; but Wootton knows what he is up against, and I admit that his confidence is infectious. One of the horses I have favoured all along is Templestowe. He is well handicapped and he is at the top of his form. So much he has demonstrated by his two successes since the appearance of the weights. He stands at an attractive price and I like his prospects of winning. I shall endeavour to solve the problem, therefore, by selecting Templestowe, and I think Perfect Son will run into the first three.

The Middle Park

ALWAYS one of the greatest attractions of the Second October meeting at headquarters is the Middle Park Stakes. As a rule this race settles the question of the two-year-old championship, but it cannot do so this time, for the simple reason that Damon, the winner of the Champagne Stakes at Doncaster, is unfortunately not among the entries. Lord Woolavington's much talked of "dark" colt, Caledon, own brother to Coronach, is there, but it may be safer to go for one about whom we know something definite. I shall make Call Boy my choice. I admit that his success a fortnight ago was not brilliantly achieved, but he is a lazy customer, and I expect to see him to much better advantage on Friday. The only double event wager I have made up to the time of writing is "Templestowe and L'Aine." In investing on that combination you will have two eminently genuine and nicely handicapped candidates for the big autumn races.

Going Abroad?

THE fortunate people who can get out of England for the winter months will soon turn their attention to travelling arrangements. It will be of interest to them to know that the P.L.M. through express Calais-Vintimille is now running in connection with the 11 a.m. service from Victoria, and provides all the usual sleeping accommodation. Seats and berths on this train may be reserved in advance at the P.L.M. office at 179, Piccadilly, or at any of the usual travel agencies. Copies of the P.L.M. timetable may also be obtained gratis from this office.

The P.L.M. Company has lately published a charming little booklet by Percy Allen, entitled "Roman and Mediæval France," which describes the glorious Southern country delightfully and informatively, and gains much from the charming illustrations by Miss Helen McKie.

OLD MORTALITY, BY SIR WALTER SCOTT

It is possible that the philosophical Cuddie Headrigg, always appreciative of the good things of life, salved his spiritual wounds with a dram of good Highland usquebaugh. That spirit, just like its lineal descendant, comforting Black & White, was a good thing to meet in adversity. Cuddie Headrigg was pure Scotch. So is Black & White.

FEMINA

LEGS AND THE DRAMA

By "CANDIDA"

Plays date in more ways than one. According to the highbrows it's by their moral—if any; or by their morals—also if any; by the sentiments uttered or implied, and, last of all (and I give you my opinion for what it's worth), by the presence or absence of skirt. I mean, of course, the drama proper, or improper, and not those revues and things where there never was any dearth of legs. Last week, feeling that it was high time to be serious, I combined Tchehov and Galsworthy in one hectic week. To Tchehov I went, not because I'm an ardent admirer, but because not to have seen The Cherry Orchard at least three times in one's life wasn't done, that's all. And as for Galsworthy, one had heard so much, and read so much, that the least one could do was to go and see.

Why do the Intelligentsia always prefer the imported article to the British? Is it because it's easier to be clever about the things one doesn't quite understand and knows that one's ignorance is shared? Is it because one can invent subtleties which don't exist when one isn't quite sure of the facts that do? Or do outsiders really see more of the game than insiders? Anyway, I know some superior people who're quite at home with Russia—their own, particular Russia—and don't know the first thing about Brixton. To Tchehov there always flock the oddest freaks in hair and costume which obviously betoken views; for presence of views on art and life and everything nearly always means absence of chic.

For three hours we wallowed in the melancholy futility of living, which is so very Russian and compares favourably, I think, with the absurd uselessness of existence of the French manner. One can't reason about futility. You either feel it, or you don't, and one man's proudest ambition is to another mere pointless what-does-it-matterness. Not that I want to discuss the things of the spirit; all I'm concerned with is legs and their extraordinary influence on the atmosphere of a play. In The Cherry Orchard there's not a glimpse of anything of the sort. Except for two exceptions who don't count, all the ladies are like the Queen of Spain in the old story. When the Mayor of Lyons presented her Majesty, very appropriately he thought, with a dozen pairs of the best silk stockings, the Queen and suite were properly shocked. "Don't you know, my good man," they said to him, "that the Queen of Spain has no legs?" In 1890, when The Cherry Orchard must have happened, they hadn't any either. What clothes, thought I as I looked at the long bell skirts, the incredible sleeves and impossible waists! How could we? Dressed in things like these one couldn't but be the creature of circumstance. One couldn't help being pathetically futile.

In such clothes anything might happen; impossible heroics, grandes passions, miracles of devotion, incredible foolishnesses, one could imagine the lot. But try them in a modern skirt and see what happens? They simply don't come off. You can't rise to heights of theatrical emotion when you show about a mile of silk stocking. Ages hence, perhaps, when this century is old, they may not see anything incongruous about skirts to the knee and the tremendous issues of life; I can't argue the point.

To me it's obvious that the absence of heroics isn't due to the presence of legs, but that the presence of the one is a result of the absence of the other. Clothes aren't an accident that happens for no particular reason. They're the outcome of what we feel and think and do. They're a safe index to the kind of civilisation which they pretend—rather naïvely—to adorn. At the Galsworthy show they were, of course, very modern about the legs. I wouldn't even have noticed the presence of so much leg if I hadn't gone straight from The Cherry Orchard to Dartmoor, from futility in long skirts to common sense in breeches.

The playwright, any playwright, has got to cut his coat according to his cloth, or go back to an old-fashioned pattern if he doesn't like the stuff. Frocks, as I saw them at the shows last week, still stop at the knee, and, though they're just as charming as can be, success is as much a question of the knees you happened to be born with as of the price you can afford to pay for what flutters above them. It's hard on the dressmaker people. They've given it out for so long that women are no good at all without beautiful clothes, and that all an ambitious young creature had to do was to pay for the work of their brains and they did the rest. But now that knees have crept into the scheme it's impossible to take the whole credit.

Hence I'm amused by the shining light in Paris who predicts a great future for his new ankle-length skirts and waists and other atrocities. It's so easy to believe what you would like to believe. If such things could be, what a harvest for the dressmaker people who haven't dared to suggest a new shape for years! Who've hidden their impotence under a show of authority in which no one believed, least of all they themselves. If such things could be—but life being what it is—they can't.

Isn't There Any Romance?

By Blanchette Illustrations by HELEN McKIE

"The football season has started"

LONDON, October 11.

DEAR COUSIN—

Is there any romance left in life? No, I don't mean for you and me, because, of course, we're incurable romantics, but for just the ordinary everyday person you meet in the street or at a tea-party who's heard of Mr. Shaw and Mr. Chesterton, but not yet of Mr. Aldous Huxley or Mr. Siegfried Sassoon. And only of the scintillating Sitwells because one of 'em simply terribly annoyed actors the other day by saying they were so gentlemanly or respectable or something, though why not?

BUT these ordinary everyday people that one meets . . . have they any romance in their lives? Those dull and elderly-looking persons, for instance, sitting about in the stalls at the theatre—haven't they any history at all? (Which is said, of course, to be a very happy condition for a country, but not altogether quite so enthralling, perhaps, for even moderately bright not quite young people.) Answer of a sort to which question or query being provided the other night in a Repertory Players' Sunday show at the Strand Theatre—play by Mr. Monckton Hoffe, who's certainly not one of the drab-and-dreary ones of this world's somewhat chequered selection of personalities and things. And methinks he's got to know quite a fair amount somehow about Life's little lights and shades.

NO romance, groans the would-be romantic dramatic author in this rather wonderful thing that the writer's somewhat modestly or skilfully called The Unnamed Play. Nothing happens to them ever (sighs and snorts the romantic author) and that's why they won't ever come to my really good serious plays, but dash off and simply wallow in tinkling tosh like Snip-Snap or Mr. Cochlot's 1926 Revue instead.

HERE'S an architect and his wife, par exemple, who've come to see the big theatre boss about letting him their Bourne End cottage for the summer. A dull couple, obviously, and when tackled by the romantic author (charming Mr. Frank Vosper) they just say, "Oh, yes, we get along all right, thank you. We don't owe for rent, and pay the local tradesmen and all that sort of thing. No, no children—we lost one daughter some years ago." And that's all. But quite enough, methinks, what?

"Dull and elderly-looking persons"

AND then, dear Cousin, all of a sudden, in the most insinuating way in the world (I do hope I shall see it again soon, but I sure think it's bound to "come West") you find yourself just at the precise moment when the allegedly dull architect (who's Mr. Henry Oscar) and his wife, alias Clare Harris, meet at the old Earl's Court Exhibition about the year One, where he quite shamelessly picks her up and snatches her from the arms of another young man. And then they're excitingly married at a Registry Office, he being a clerk of sorts at £2 10*s.* a week, and she also in business at invoicing or something.

"Winter's Approach"

AND then, after all sorts of ups and downs, they slide into smooth water—they'd love to travel in the East and have some real excitement, but there isn't time—and then, there we find ourselves back in the impresario's office, and they're being given tickets for a box at Chit-Chat or Mr. Charlan's 1926 Show because they have such frivolous, futile tastes and don't really want to be worried by any of these serious tragic things.

A WHOLE philosophy here, n'est-ce pas?, dear Cousin, or the explanation of a philosophy. Romance . . . yes,

Romance brings up the 9.15, as Mr. Kipling or some one said, doesn't it? But do we so terribly want to talk about it when it's there? Can it be, I wonder, that the real awful urge for romance comes from those who've never had it and are never likely to? Yes, I rather trow it's just poss., though having no absolument certain and official information on that point.

YOU know, I don't believe authors or managers really need be the very least bit frightened of shocking their audiences these days, or the Lord Chamberlain, for that matter. Judging, I mean, by some of the plays that are now, as you might say, calmly and successfully pursuing their uncensored course.

THERE'S the real new honest-to-goodness

But entre nous, dear Cousin, really do think this is just about the brightest and most entertaining of all the shows at this present moment proceeding in this modern Babylon of ours.

卐

Just two things, anyway, herein you simply must see, or you positively won't have lived. One's the collar-stud ballet, where Mr. Mundin, having lost same while dressing for dinner, is helped in all sorts of pas seuls and things by the entire company to find it, including Mr. Anton Dolin (such a sweet Russian dancer from Ireland, whose real name is O'Brien or something), and finally has to be turned upside down because it'd fallen down his back all the time. And that gala night at Galashiels, when the bonnie Scots all turn up at the local "Frolics" and recklessly dance to the seductive strains of the harr-monium—ye hae got to see it tae believe it, and then a doot if it isn't almost too good to be true.

In Sunny Italy

So there are a few joys left, you see, even for us who lead the urban life, while idle people like you wallow in the gorgeous sunninesses of Italy. And even if the football season has started (sad signal of fell winter's approach), there's lots of quite amusing things happening, like Mr. H. G. Wells's rude remarks about people in his latest book, and the boom in emeralds (hast any?), and of course toujours and more important than all the imminent not to say essential purchase of autumn plus winter frocks.

卐

Which last, by the way, are rather pleasingly set forth, some of them, in that new show of Mr. Cochran's, The Merry-Go-Round, that they started at the Troc. "Supper-time" last week. So nice, too, to see the mannequins actually dancing in the new frocks and furs—makes 'em seem almost well-nigh human for once.

With love, Yours ever,

Blanchette.

THE GRIM NECESSITY OF WORK

By H. DENNIS BRADLEY.

THIS is a gloomy essay. It is almost worthy of a mediæval dean, inflicting his dreary philosophy upon a bored assembly, in order to extract a manufactured emotion from the sickness of his anæmic surroundings.

None of us want to work. Our natural tendencies are all towards pleasure and work follows as pain. That, however, is the unpleasant, if natural, consequence of creation; otherwise we should not be born.

Women can always justify their claims to existence, because without them men could never evolve. Men can only justify their existence by works of creative art and productivity, and the attempted betterment of their primitive species.

The intelligent individualist must necessarily detest the degrading serfdom of military conscription, where manhood becomes the clod of vicarious sacrifice; but the conscription of industrial units under equally unintelligent leadership is almost as great a menace. Where does progression lie in this Robotish servitude?

The ego of creation is dormant in every man. To progress he must express himself to the utmost of his individuality. The creative artist could never survive upon forming fours, or upon working only from nine to five—a perfunctory slave—doing bad work mechanically.

It is all a matter of choice. The slave may choose the chains of minimum hours and perpetual unintelligent serfdom, and the protected slacker may choose the curse of ineffective boredom, but the instinctive producer will always demand unlimited freedom for his mental energy.

The clod and the artist are alike in their detestation of work, but the artist appreciates the joy of achievement.

The firm of Pope & Bradley has achieved success chiefly because every man in its employ is paid by the results of his individual effort. It is a system of specialised piecework, and not deplorable timework. If the timework system were used, the price would be about thirty guineas for each suit instead of Lounge Suits and Overcoats from £9 9s. Dinner Suits from £14 14s. Dress Suits from £16 16s. Riding Breeches from £5 15s. 6d.

BYSTANDER BRIDGE

OBJECTIONABLE BLIND LEADS

By A. E. MANNING FOSTER

"If it had not been for that first lead of yours we should have saved the game and rubber."

How often does one hear that remark in a card room? Since so much frequently depends on the initial blind lead, it is a pity that more players do not give a little time and thought to the matter.

It is not sufficient to know by heart the conventional table of leads. It is necessary to consider the position and to recognise why certain opening leads which are frequently made are hopelessly bad.

I am assuming that you are in the position of having no good lead. Your partner had made no bid to guide you, and you do not hold any of the sequences or combinations which you understand. What are you to do? You can't say, "I refuse to lead"; or you can say it, but no one will take any notice. You have got to start with something. Let me tell you what to avoid.

* * * * *

The principle to guide you in your initial blind lead is, if possible, to lead a card which will not cause you or your partner to sacrifice any possible trick. Therefore—

(1) Avoid opening from a three-card suit headed by King or Queen.

This lead is, for some reason or other, a favourite lead with mediocre players. They hate leading suits in which they hold no winners. If you lead from a three suit King high and your partner has the Ace or Queen, no harm may be done. But if he has not, it may well happen that you give away a trick in the suit unnecessarily.

(2) Avoid a strengthening card in a weak suit.

This is also a very popular lead. Yet the chances are two to one that you establish the suit for the Declarer by making your partner play out his winning card.

E.g., you hold Queen and two others. You lead the Queen as a strengthening card. Your partner holds the Ace, and Dummy has no honour. Declarer holds King, Jack, etc. You have thrown away a trick by the lead. The same applies often to a lead of the Jack from Jack to three. The lead is also bad, as your partner may mistake it for a doubleton.

* * * * *

(3) Avoid a doubleton lead when you have only two little trumps.

A doubleton is very seldom successful unless you are able to stop the trump lead at least once. Its two chief objections are: (a) it may make your partner sacrifice a probable trick, (b) it establishes the suit for the Declarer by taking out your partner's winning cards in the suit.

These objections apply also to a singleton lead, but whereas a singleton lead has some chance of success a doubleton has little or none. You invite your partner either to give up command of the suit or to sacrifice a probable trick for the sake of a problematic ruff on the third round, by which time it is more than probable Declarer will have extracted your trumps.

* * * * *

A very popular blind lead with poor players is to open with a trump. This is an old Whist principle: "When in doubt lead trumps." It is argued by the upholders of this lead that, as the Declarer is presumably strong in trumps and must make them, there can be no harm in leading them. But this is a fallacy. More often than not by opening trumps you are playing the Declarer's game and possibly killing winners in your partner's hand.

HALITOSIS

A tremendous social and commercial handicap

The causes from which halitosis (bad breath) springs may be either deep rooted or trifling, but it is very certain that its effects can be disastrous. And it is doubly unfortunate that the sufferer from halitosis is always the very last one to be aware of it.

Its effects socially are distressing. You are shunned—delicately, kindly, perhaps, but none the less definitely. Intimate and personal meeting is carefully avoided. Friendships cool strangely. You find yourself left alone . . . .

In business, halitosis is found to be a very real handicap. One does not seem to get on. One feels keenly the same "banishment"—a serious disadvantage in business.

The cause of halitosis is an affair between your doctor and yourself. But, meanwhile, you should lose no time in putting an end to its devastating effects. This is the easiest thing in the world. With every bottle of Milton—which your chemist has—are clear and concise directions for finding immediate relief from halitosis.

CAREERS for GIRLS

GOING TO THE DOGS

By "THE KENNELMAN"

A CORRESPONDENT who describes herself as "one of four girls who love Dogs as much as they love THE BYSTANDER," has been much moved by an interesting account which recently appeared in a daily paper of a London Dog Hospital, its nurses, routine, and excellent general organisation. "We don't feel competent to make a business of Dog-breeding, but are much attracted by the nursing idea. Would you agree that any girl with industry and enterprise, having money enough to get a couple of rooms and put a card in the window, could soon make a profit of £300 a year; and if so, would two or three such girls make £600 or £900?"

This is not really the sort of question to be answered with a bald yes or no; but if that were compulsory "The Kennelman" would choose the negative on the safety-first principle. The wonderful recent increase in Dog-keeping has without a doubt created many attractive openings for suitable seekers after jobs connected with the care of Dogs; particularly, perhaps, for women, and especially for nursing and boarding. But "any girl with industry and enterprise"—no, that's a bit too sweeping.

Dog-fancying has grown into something much more than a hobby. In this country to-day it is a big industry in which millions of capital are involved and thousands of experts are engaged—if one includes the different trades and enterprises dependent upon it, that is. The business activities connected with it are subject to the same hazards as other businesses, and make similar demands on those who seek profit in them; the first of all is that, to succeed, you must know your job, and pursue it with skill as well as enthusiasm.

This much it's safe to say: In big centres, notably in and near London, there are excellent openings, first-rate sporting chances of profit, for the right sort of girls (men, too), not only in the nursing of Dogs, but in the skilled provision of board and lodging, grooming, exercising, training, preparation for show, buying and selling, and the like. But the folk who pay the piper—and there are plenty willing to pay—demand genuine and expert skill for their money, and can't be expected to pay simply for energy, and the qualification—necessary though that is—of being "fond of" Dogs. If your "any girl with industry," etc., is level-headed and fully equipped technically, the £300 a year ambition is by no means out of the way; easier of attainment in this direction, perhaps, than in a good many others one reads of. But the skill and knowledge must be there; and the old apprenticeship idea is the only way of putting it there. The textbooks can be helpful; but practical experience is essential.

The soundest plan is to give a year to working for someone else; and, after a few months, anyhow, it's quite possible to "earn while you learn." Study the doggy advertisements, and publish one of your own, for an opening as kennelmaid or assistant. The important point is not the pay, but getting all-round work in really good kennels, preferably where several breeds are cultivated by well-established owners. Later, try for a place under a Vet. with a good practice as canine specialist. Some such run a Dog hospital, hard, practical work which provides invaluable education. Given good health, good sense, and a real interest in Dogs, a year's experience on these lines really will qualify girl or man to earn a profitable living as an independent practitioner; and a very interesting and congenial life it is

"It takes two to make a queue!"

I'm Plain Mr. York of York, Yorks

"Who are you, sitting there?" asked the policeman.

"I'm a queue," explained Mr. York of York, Yorks.

"You can't be a queue," said the policeman, doubtfully, "at least, not an official queue. It takes more than one man to make a queue. But aren't you hungry?"

"Not a bit of it," said Mr. York, smiling. "You see, I always carry this plain chocolate—Plain York. It's so good and so nourishing, you can go for hours on it."

"Just the thing for me," thought the policeman.

Mr. York, being a bit of a psycho-analyst, read the policeman's thoughts. "Have a bit," he said, "just on the queue-tee."

"Don't mind if I do," said the policeman.

"Sit down then," said Mr. York, "it takes two to make a queue."

"I'm Plain Mr. York of York, Yorks,
And it's hard to find rhymes for my talks,
But I've heard people state
That for plain chocolate
I've got 'em all beat by long chalks."

The Exhibition will be made up of six sections, the Motor Car section, comprising 98 British, French, American, Canadian, Italian, Belgian, and Austrian exhibitors, the Coachwork section of 63 exhibitors, the Tyre section made up of 22 manufacturers, and Accessory and Component section, which includes the products of no fewer than 331 firms, Press section of eleven publishing companies, and seven Associations. The stands cover no fewer than 180,000 square feet of floor space, while the frontage of the exhibits, including the gangways, is approximately 3½ miles in length. The price of admission is 5s. on each day with the exception of Fridays and Saturdays, when the charge is 2s. 6d.

Different types of cars give one different points of view as regards the pleasures of motoring, but it is undoubtedly a fact that the latest Rolls-Royce gives one the most complete enjoyment. The manufacturers have always had the ideal of making a car just as good as is humanly possible, but they are never satisfied with their product, with the result that each succeeding series has a number of small refinements which many manufacturers would scarcely consider necessary, but which Rolls-Royce, Ltd., consider essential for the service of their customers. The latest "New Phantom," on which I carried out an extended run the other day, possesses numerous small refinements as compared with its predecessor, and wonderful as was the running of the last model, the latest is even more refined. The fascination of driving a Rolls-Royce seems to lie in the fact that the car almost appears to be endowed with human intelligence, and apparently anticipates the wishes of the driver and carries them out automatically. It is a car which requires less effort to drive than any I have handled.

The "New Phantom" does its work in the most unobtrusive manner. The makers have secured practically absolute silence of operation even on the lower gears. There is no sense of the powerful engine beneath the bonnet, yet so great is its reserve of power that it will drive the heavy car from about four to over 80 m.p.h. It is a marvellous hill-climber on top gear, and the lower gears are really useful when required. The braking system is as near perfection as can be imagined. The servo system is so nicely balanced that the brakes

THE reductions in the price of tyres which have recently been announced will be welcomed by all motorists who have to study carefully the cost of their pastime. Nowadays, modern tyres have such an extremely long life that it often happens that the owner of a car disposes of it before the first set of tyres is worn out. Thus the advantages of the reduced replacement cost will be shared by the purchaser of the second-hand car.

THE magnetos used by Sir Alan Cobham, K.B.E., on his flight to Australia and back are the identical two B.T.H. magnetos which he used on his previous flight to Cape Town. To start for Australia with the same magnetos which had experienced such severe conditions as those of the Cape Town flight is evidence of the pilot's very great confidence in this small but essential part of his equipment. The success of the flight shows how well placed was this confidence.

FOR next season the popular car which has hitherto been known as the Fiat Seven will be called the Fiat 9 h.p. This change has been rendered necessary owing to the fact that many prospective purchasers have been under the impression that the car was of diminutive dimensions with a performance to correspond. This, of course, is not the case, and the new title should do much to remove this misapprehension. Fiat prices have been generally reduced for the coming season, and the models to be marketed are the 9 h.p., the 12 h.p., the 15-20 h.p., the 20-30 h.p. six-cylinder and the 40 h.p. six-cylinder.

ANYONE interested in pressed steel work should visit the Hudson-Essex works on the Great West Road. The intricacy of the complicated sections to be turned out for the all-steel bodies have to be seen to be believed, and although those displayed at the British works are not to be compared with the numerous and enormous ones to be found at the American plant, those on view will give an idea of the vastness of the problem and the success with which it has been solved.

THE Vauxhall 14-40 h.p. is one of the most attractive of the medium-sized saloons. The engine is comparatively lightly taxed, the running costs are low, yet in spite of the size, weight, and comfort of the body, the car has a very lively performance and is a real pleasure to drive. There is none of that sluggishness or heavy feeling such as one often experiences with a medium-sized saloon. The acceleration is particularly good, and when correct use is made of the gear box very fast hill-climbing can be carried out. At the same time the top gear performance, even on the steepest hills, is remarkably good.

A physician writes in the "Medical Press & Circular": "Sanatogen has an immediate and remarkable effect shown by a steady increase of strength and energy."

Hullo! What's the trouble—Nerves?

"Now really, is there anything to cry about?"

"Oh, I feel so unhappy."

"Yes, so I see. But crying without any real cause can only mean one thing: Nerves. You should try Sanatogen for a few weeks. It will brace you up wonderfully and once your nerves and blood are right you will feel yourself again—more disposed to laugh than to cry. And it will give you new appetite too, and bring colour to your cheeks. It has done that very thing for me."

Sanatogen infuses into the cells of blood and nerves exactly those elements — phosphorus and albumin—from which bodily health and nerve-strength are derived. Over 24,000 physicians have written enthusiastic letters about the success they obtained with Sanatogen.

Dame Sarah Grand, Mayoress of Bath, writes: "Nothing ever does me so much good when I am run-down as Sanatogen. It has set me up and kept me up again and again."

And Miss Olga Nethersole, founder of the People's League of Health, writes: "It is with great pleasure that I recommend Sanatogen, having greatly benefited by its effects."

Grey Hair

IT is not necessary to stress the undesirability of Grey Hair, because every woman desires the retention of her hair's youthful perfection.
Inecto is recognised universally as the effective means whereby the exact colour and the actual texture of the hair may be perpetuated.
After but one personal treatment, which occupies only half an hour of one's time, Inecto produces results of guaranteed permanency. The hair may be Permanently Waved or Marcel Waved afterwards.

IT has been the experience of the leading hairdressers that Inecto justifies that confidence reposed in it.

A skin as soft as Satin

Beauty of complexion has an irresistible charm—it is the birthright of every woman. To promote skin-health and loveliness, the modern Parisienne uses La Reine des Crèmes—a beauty treatment which is complete in itself—inasmuch as it cleanses the pores of impurities, serves as a nutrient and protects the skin against inclement weather. In use La Reine des Crèmes is refreshing and invigorating. It softens, soothes and keeps the skin fresh and youthful-looking.

Obtainable in the well-known jars, price 1/3, from Hairdressers, Beauty Specialists, Stores, etc.

Make sure of the genuine Cream by seeing labels are neither broken, scratched nor defaced, nor boxes opened.

Air at rest is the best non-conductor of heat or cold, it insulates any body against outside temperatures.

The scientific weave of AERTEX fabric provides a mantle of air, imprisoned in thousands of tiny cells. This wonder weave is the reason why AERTEX garments prevent chills on cold days and keep the body cool when the temperature rises.

FASHION'S FANCIES

By MRS. JACK MAY

THE BEAUTY OF SQUIRREL

A charming coat of grey squirrel by Harrods, of Brompton Road. The skins are arranged at the sides to have a cleverly concealed pleat, and the garment is lined with crêpe de Chine

Sketch by Helen Havers

The Cape-coat in Fur Wraps

THE familiar slogan, "Get it at Harrods," Brompton Road, S.W., is particularly applicable to furs this season. The model coats here should be seen, and without any delay, since not only do they express the last word, but all are of exclusive design and made on the premises, thus ensuring sound skins and workmanship. A really sensational offer is a range of fine quality seal coney coats, trimmed with every kind of contrasting pelts, that commence in price at 11 guineas. More than one of these models embodies the fashionable little sling cape; a notably handsome example carries ands of moleskin, while a long slim coat minus a cape has a deep, shaped hem in front and long revers collar of Tasmanian opossum. And yet another accorded a cape finish was handsomely trimmed with real skunk, and lined throughout, as are the majority, with crêpe de Chine to tone. Unquestionably fine value, too, is apparent in the model illustrated of selected grey squirrel, the skins effectively worked and arranged at the sides to have a cleverly concealed pleat. Harrods' price for this elegant garment, lined with grey crêpe de Chine, is only 69 guineas. And all the sums quoted, it will be clearly understood, apply to coats made to measure and under the personal supervision of the experts at Harrods.

Suède on the Spot

JUST as we are beginning to conjecture what we should get to replace the thin silk culottes, worn during the summer months, for greater warmth, Leather Craft, Malvern, has entered the arena with the very thing. The world of women will very shortly not only be talking of, but wearing, the "Gazelda" featherweight knickers, that weigh only 4½ ounces and therefore fall in with the demand for the minimum amount of underclothing. Specifically described as ideal for sports, shipboard, and golf, there really seems no valid reason why these garments should not be worn generally. They are weatherproof and wearproof, but not airproof, hence their hygienic value. Furthermore, they can be washed and boiled without the least damage, towards which admirable end they are produced in only two natural shades, chamois and a very pale beige. Manufactured by, and obtainable only from, Leather Craft, the cost is 52*s.* 6*d.* the pair. The firm's London showrooms are 13, 14, and 17, Brompton Arcade, Knightsbridge.

All the Latest Fashions in Felt Hats

SINCE hats must either match the coat or gown, or some contrast in the latter, the expenditure exacted by millinery is becoming a knotty problem with many of us. With crowns almost anything can be done provided they are deep enough, a particular favourite having a sloping or drawn-back appearance. This effect—and it is quite persuasive in its way—is shown in one of the models sketched at D. H. Evans, Oxford Street, W., in the ready-to-wear department. It is of fur felt and hand made, the narrow brim in front underbound to keep it firm, gradually widening towards the back, where it is thrown up in an original sloping line. Trimmed with a band of Petersham ribbon, the sole decoration these amusing shapes seem to need, the price is 25*s.* 9*d.*—a sum that will tempt many women to have more than one.

Just now there are felts and felts, the excessive demand accounting for a good deal of rubbish being sold; so only at a really sound establishment such as this is it safe to touch hats at what may be termed popular prices. For instance, there is a range to be seen in these salons at 12*s.* 11*d.* in many and various shapes. They are well worth looking into; although that applies to all the millinery here, much of which is supplied in several head fittings, and likewise embodies styles suitable to older women who cannot adopt extreme modes. More or

AN INNOVATION FOR THE WINTER

These culottes of "Gazelda," the featherweight suède, are ideal for cold weather. They are made by Leather Craft, 13, 14 and 17, Brompton Arcade, Knightsbridge less of this character is the other pictured example, another hand-made fur felt, with dented crown and a slightly wider brim, priced at 39*s.* 6*d.*

Stockings and Shoes

THE importance attached and attention paid to these dress accessories wanes not at all. Together with that immaculately shingled and waved or shinily brushed head they can make or mar a toilette. The dark blue shoe that is de rigueur in Paris with gown or costume of that colour has much to commend it, worn with either nude or smoke-grey silk stockings. Some of these shoes are finely piped with black patent leather and have high Cuban heels, others, of blue antelope, the fronts cut deep, are finished with an octagonal buckle.

There are rumours of gaiters made to match dresses, also the possible wear of high riding boots for muddy weather. The Russian, of course, is dead; that was completely done in by cheapness, although it is early just yet to speak of such footgear. Satin sandal shoes to match the gown are creeping more and more into favour. Girls who dance much find them far more comfortable than any other. For general wear there is a tentative revival of the very pale brown satin, the colour of café au lait, with more milk than coffee, or perhaps treacle better describes the shade. Anyway, it goes especially well with black dance frocks, the stockings much paler, though toned. The only coloured stocking that seems to have caught on at all is the very palest green.

The Long Unbroken Line

THAT this is the underlying principle of the modern slim, souple figure, and the delightfully artistic style of dress it shows off to such perfection tells its own story in the Bien Jolie corsette, a foundation garment that for simplicity, ease, and the comfortable support that is afforded without the wearer realising it, has never been surpassed. It is a real pleasure to extol the merits of so thoroughly admirable an article and without the slightest fear of having the commendation criticised. As there are various types of figures, so are there certain slight differences in the Bien Jolie corsette. The example illustrated is especially devised to impart the requisite beauty of line to the full average or heavy form. Towards this end it is lightly but skilfully boned, and has knitted elastic side sections that are particularly kind to generous figures, according them a slim, youthful contour.

The actual model shown is of the best quality floral brocade, No. 6,323, and retails at 47*s.* 6*d.*, which brings the reminder that Marshall and Snelgrove's, Oxford Street, are holding a special display of living models from the 18th to the 22nd inst. during the hours of eleven to twelve in the mornings and three to four in the afternoons, when all will be able to judge for themselves the value of each individual garment.

PERFECTION OF LINE

The Bien Jolie corset, No. 6323, which is made of best quality floral brocade. From the 13th to the 22nd of this month, Messrs. Marshall and Snelgrove, of Oxford Street, are holding special displays of these corsets twice daily on living models

A Dress Show in a Good Cause

Heard the new telesmatic Decca?

It's positively amazing. By the discovery of the Telesmatic System of Sound Reproduction, now embodied in a new Tone Arm, a remodelled Dulciflex Amplifier and an entirely new Sound Box, the Decca has been improved out of all knowledge.

Remember the grand volume of the old Decca, its tone, its clearness? Well, the new telesmatic Decca is infinitely louder, infinitely more natural in tone, infinitely clearer. Really, there is no comparison in musical quality between the old and the new Decca, even though in appearance and in portability there is practically no difference. The new Decca is just as light, weighs just the same, is just the same size—so it is just as easily taken with you—and though so greatly improved there has been no increase in price.

The new telesmatic

or large box contribution was asked from those who did not buy. Needless to say, there was no demur in giving to the latter, and, judging from the appreciation accorded the galaxy of lovely clothes, the orders placed must have totalled up to a nice sum. As a further attraction, Marcelle asked for, and obtained, the assistance of a bevy of representative actresses to act as mannequins. And right royally did these generous ladies come forward and enact what to them must have been unaccustomed parts.

Motoring Comfort

Motoring in Autumn, however pleasant the surroundings may be, is apt to prove a chilly business unless one is provided with a warm rug. The ideal rug for motorists is the "Motoluxe," made from pure alpaca wool, at the moderate cost of five guineas. For open cars the interlined windproof variety is recommended at an additional cost of half a guinea. The "Motoluxe" is assured of a warm welcome from all motorists.

Laundry by Post

Recognising the need for the really efficient dressings of shirts and collars, Sinclairs, of Homecroft Road, Wood Green, London, N.22, have decided to offer a service by post which will appeal to men who are fastidious over their linen. On receipt of instructions a strong and specially constructed box for collars, etc., is sent free of all charge to any address. Collars are produced with a finish identical to new, and each collar is moulded to fit the shirt neckband. Shirts receive equal care and attention.

PRAWNS WITH CAVIARE.
OYSTER TOAST.
TOMATO TIMBALE.
EGGS WITH OYSTER SAUCE.
DEVILLED ALMONDS.

Prawns with Caviare

FRY in butter to a golden brown eight rounds of stale bread, about two inches in diameter. Put into a basin 2 oz. of caviare, with half a shallot finely chopped, a few drops of lemon juice, and a pinch of cayenne. Stir all thoroughly together, drain the toast, and when it is cool place a thin slice of lemon and a teaspoonful of caviare on each croûte. Place a shelled prawn on each side of every croûte and half a stoned olive in the centre. To be served cold in a small silver or glass dish, and garnish with parsley.

Oyster Toast

Mince very finely one anchovy, have ready a score of oysters, remove the beards, and chop them small. Mix the anchovy and oysters together. Put them into a saucepan with two tablespoonfuls of cream, add a little cayenne, and, when melted through, spread on small rounds of buttered toast, and serve.

Tomato Timbale

Boil ½ lb of macaroni twenty minutes, strain it, and cut into lengths which will fit a plain round mould; line the mould with it, arranging the top by bending the macaroni in a spiral form. Fill this mould with a mixture made of 1 lb. of tomatoes, 1 lb. of mushrooms, and a ¼ lb. of grated cheese, all pounded together with 4 oz. of butter and the yolk of an egg; season with a little salt and cayenne. Put a paper round the mould and steam for one hour. Turn out and serve with a thick gravy or tomato sauce round. This makes an excellent luncheon dish.

Eggs with Oyster Sauce (an American Recipe)

Scald ten oysters in their own liquid, then take them out and cut them up small. Melt one tablespoonful of butter in a saucepan, and stir in gradually two tablespoonfuls of flour. Next stir in a cup and a half of milk, and the oyster liquor, and season with salt, pepper, half a teaspoonful of lemon juice, and one tablespoonful of grated cheese. Let it boil until it begins to thicken. Poach six eggs and lay on rounds of toast in a shallow baking-dish. Pour the sauce over them, sprinkling a little grated cheese on the top, and put the dish in a hot oven for a few minutes.

Devilled Almonds

Blanch ½ lb. of almonds, throw them into cold water, and then dry thoroughly with a cloth. Put the almonds into a frying-pan, in which 2 oz. of butter is frizzling. Fry until a golden brown, drain on a sieve in front of the fire, sprinkle with salt and cayenne, and serve very hot.

THROUGH THE MAJOR'S EYEGLASS — No. 3

"How men pick winners"

SOME men study form and weights and distances, work out complicated sums, and so arrive at "mathematical certainties." The only snag is that horses don't understand mathematics.

Others shut their eyes and prick with a pin.

Just as likely a way—especially if a burnt sacrifice is offered at the same time. Light up an "Army Club" and see if that doesn't help. Anyhow it's as good a cigarette as you could want to smoke—really choice tobacco; fine water-marked paper hygienically free from printer's ink; freshness and sweetness always preserved by the now famous "Army Club" method of packing.

"His Master's Voice"

Gramophone with any other, and judge for yourself.

It is the only gramophone capable of reproducing the music of the great masters exactly as they composed it, and extends the range of musical reproduction by 2½ octaves, giving to highest treble and lowest bass a brilliance hitherto unattainable.

Sir Edward Elgar

says that it is

"Without doubt the most important invention in the history of the gramophone"
